

TIMELY SIDELIGHTS ON THE DAY'S OUTPUT OF NEWS FROM A THOUSAND SOURCES

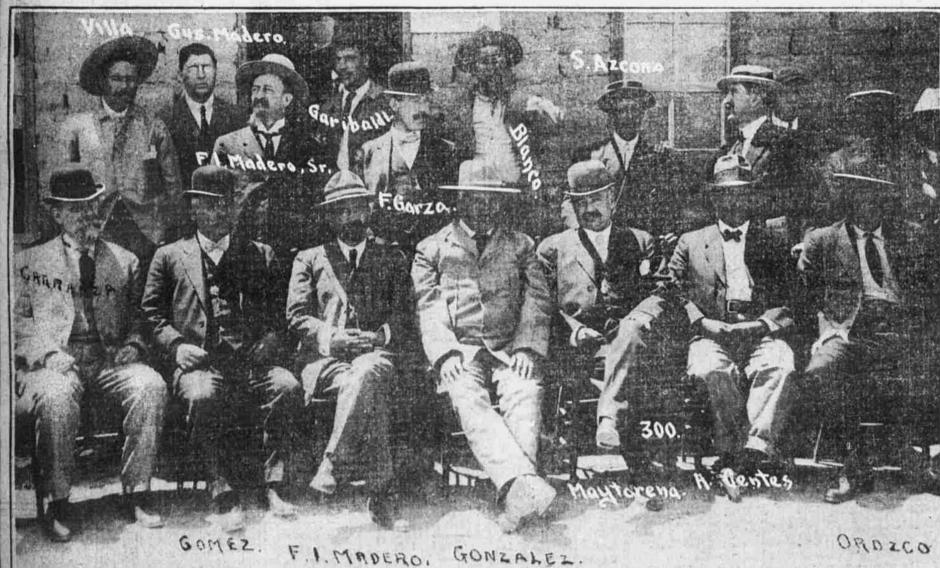

THE MODERN NAOMI OF MEXICO

Wherever the Mexican fighter goes, his wife goes also. And if he happens to fall, she is perfectly capable of continuing his work with the rifle. No Mexican army is complete without its auxiliary corps of women.

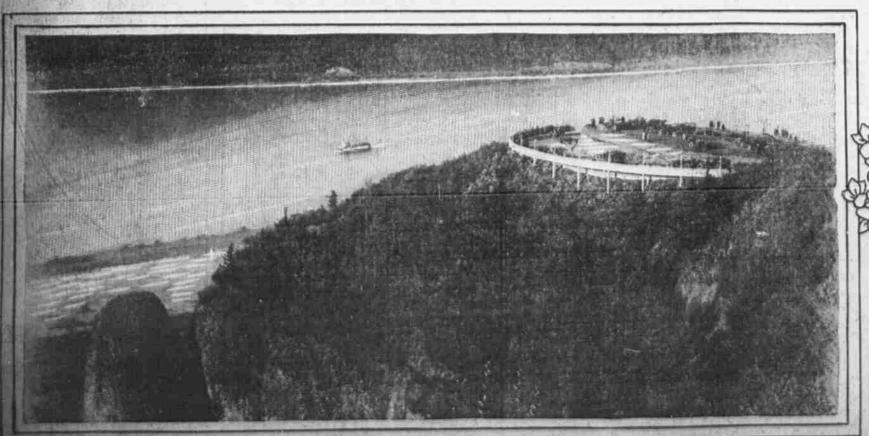

NOGALES—WHENCE UNITED STATES TROOPS MAY ENTER MEXICO Nogales, Arizona, and Nogales, Mexico, are virtually one and the same town. There is no way to tell which is which, except by means of the poles down the middle of the principal street shown-here which form the dividing line.

A PHOTOGRAPH REPLETE WITH THE HISTORY OF SORELY TROUBLED MEXICO

This picture is especially interesting just now, in view of the changes that have taken place in the five years since it was taken. Carranza appears seated just in front of his now bitter enemy, Villa. F. I. Madero was assassinated February 13, 1913, and his brother, Gustavo, was shot soon afterward. Garza became provisional president for a short time. Orozco was killed a few months ago in a border raid. All were united at the time in their hatred for Porfirio Diaz.

BEAUTY SPOT ON OREGON'S $2,000,000 COLUMBIA RIVER HIGHWAY

This is Crown Point, where the read is 700 feet above the river and from which one may look 60 miles through the Columbia Gorge. So proud are Fortland elitests of this highway that they are preparing magnificent pictures which are to be shown in Eastern cities, including Philadelphia, at an early date.

RACE SUICIDE MEETS WITH NO FAVOR IN MEXICO
The most distinguishing feature of the typical Mexican home is the unadorned brown babies which sprawl in the sun and grow fat on what would be the death of an American baby.

GRACEFUL SOCIETY GIRL DANCES FOR SUFFRAGISTS

Miss Constance Sinney, related to many prominent Philadelphia families, appeared in solo dances last night at the dinner given for Mrs. George A. Piccael, retiring president of the Woman Sufrage party.
