Maybe You Don't Believe in Advertising, But—Your Competitors Do.

The majority of Americans don't believe in militarism, but they believe in sufficient armament because—woe to the business or nation that leaves itself open to aggression.

But preparedness, at best, is an expense. It is a tribute levied by the Great God Mars. We pay lest worse befall us.

Advertising is not an expense. It is an investment. It is preparedness against invasion by competition. It is also, and even more so, a conquering force that brings ever-increasing prosperity to the manufacturer who employs it wisely.

Can any reasoning business man doubt that advertising, combined with quality and perfect distribution, built and maintains great business "empires"?

Can any reasoning business man doubt the value of well-conducted publicity?

If you are a manufacturer, a jobber or a retailer, you will find something of absorbing interest to you in a little book called, "The A B C of Advertising." It will be mailed to you on request. Address:
