BY NOW the station was reached and the communicative chauffeur had another V from which to amputate a fat tip. On the railroad platform, Monte soon found the blue-coated, brass-buttoned official in charge.

"It is that package left by the taxicab driver, I am asking about?" said Monte. "But its gone on the 1:14 train for New York," said the railroad official. "The Pullman porter of Car B came to me and got it. Saw him go up inside the coach and hand it to the lady herself."

Monte pulled out his watch. It was

"Know the porter's name?" "Yes, it was Sam," was the reply, "Been on this division for ten years. He is as honest as the day's long. He told me the lady had sent him for the package. I "Never mind that," said Monte excitedly, possessed of an idea. "What time does that train reach New York?" "Three o'clock," said the railroad official. If it's important-" "Go ahead."

"If it's very important run over to the station master's office and get the Manbattan Transfer station on the long-distance telephone. The 1 o'clock train gets there at 2:41. Five minutes lay up to hook on an electric engine. That's right. Down those stairs, through the subway tunnel, and up into the station-"

But Monte had outsped his instructions, and a courteous station master soon had the colored porter on the wire. Monte snatched at the receiver.

"Is that Sam; porter Pullman Car B?" "Dat's me."

"Did you deliver a shoebox to a passenger in your car at North Philadel-"Deed I did, boss. But the lady and her maid done get off the train at Trenton, more than an hour ago."

"The devil you say," shouted Monte. "Describe the lady, never mind the maid. Be quick !"

"She was a foreign person with a right smart pair of black eyes. There was a 'Z. S.' on her handbag, boss, cause I done pulling out."

"Initials Z. S.," muttered Monte, "Zeda Sigvay-The Countess! By thunder!" "Crooks?" asked the smiling station agent.

"Not exactly." replied Monte as he hung up. "I call them rattling clever people. What's the damage?"

"Not a cent to you," was the reply, "We always help out our prominent patrons." And as he gave Monte the once-over ngain he added: "We know our people when they drop in."

"There are times when it is well to have good tailor," thought Monte as he climbed to the westbound platform to catch the next local into Broad street after sending this wire to Craig Andrews;

Come tonight to my study. Urgent, Bring expert code-reader with you.

CHAPTER XIV Sympathetic Ink

GOING to the huge fireplace in his study Monte Crispen selected a plump, likely log from a brass woodrack and tossed it into the dying embers of the grate; the log crackled and reflected a drowsy light over the whole room; his ds instinctively pulled their chairs up fire, for the night outside was chill. On this evening the company included some old friends. Craig Andrews, the astute lawyer, taciturn as ever; Agent W., of the Secret Service, unexpected, yet most welcome. With Binns, an expert international code reader, he had rushed over from New York, whose frightened pop eyes and thin hair gave him the look of a singed cat.

"Before we start trying to decode the cryptic cross, what is the conclusion you draw from what I have just told you of the vanishing shoebox?" asked Monte of the grave-faced Government official, whom Andrews had sent for.

"It is obvious that the Sigvay gang has eveloped into a two-ring crime circus," as the reflective reply.

"A professional crook's animal counterart is the East India mongoose, a ferreted mammal, that whenever time hangs vy attacks and eats its own. Honor ong thieves! Bah! There is no such ng; never was. It's one of those book rases. Crooks know no patriotism. ney are out to get from those that have.

"Undoubtedly the case," replied Agent ; W., with grim certainty.

For a whole month past Agent W. had been engrossed in an attempt to get a lead as to the whereabouts of Herr Hochmeister. The police of a hundred cities were on the close watch for the arch plotter, but handlcapped by the absence of even a photograph of a man who presumably received the ready assistance of misguided, non-patriotic citizens, they had been of no help whatever to the Federal authorities.

"How about Lumley, the Voice of the seemed such a good lead, aside from his egotism."

"That man is dying, an incurable disdoubt if he will last out his utility to us as a 'stool pigeon' de luxe. The Sigvay gang knew when to toss him over, and it is precious little he knows of them at that. He has tried to make good, yet he is only he exudes ideas by the score, and falls lamentably when it comes to a single prac-we now have," tical result. We have supplied him with funds and keep him circling around the big hotels of New York, Chicago, Cleveland, and other cities, always under close surveillance. He has been unable to connect up with Hochmeister or that gentleman's fascinating niece."

Agent W. lowered his voice to a whisper as he added, "Beside the poor simp is still love-sick over the Countess Zeda, and I question his loyalty to us the moment he passes under her subtle, perfumed influence."

"Are you sure the Countess is Hoch meister's niece?" questioned Monte feverishly.

"We are never sure of anything these days. She has to be somebody's niece. Why not Hochmeister's? I have had the immigration records searched for months. back, and we cannot find a clue as to when either she or he got into the country. pick it up for her. Got to go, boss; train's The Ambassadors of three European countries flatly repudiate—they are diplomats, you know-and impetuously deny that he has official connection, direct or indirect, with their home governments."

"Don't look so at me," begged Monte. "I am cured. You must know I gave my word of honor in the shoebox affair. Then I never dreamed that she was implicated until the Pullman porter described her."

"There you are-honor! That's a quality crooks inevitably count on their victim's possessing," testily grumbled the Government man. "They have none of it themselves. Cheer up, youngster! We would have fared no better than you did. probably not as well. done otherwise he was in a position to let the $5000 go hang without a chance of getting caught."

"You amaze me," said Andrews. "At any rate we have definitely uncovered another member of the gang, and incidentally discovered it is a house divided against itself."

"Exactly," said Agent W., "and that is something of an accomplishment in itself for a volunteer investigator. I should say that this dark-bearded man is an international blackmailer by profession, a past-master at vending stolen goods in the great fear market of the world. Those who buy letters of a blackmailer usually fear exposure, do they not? This time the trade was in something else. but the method of delivery and receipt was that practiced in extortion cases. People?" questioned Andrews. "He They only improve with practice, these rascals. I am convinced that the gang has a permanent base in this city, probably a flat or a private house, for neither ease," replied the Secret Service agent. "I the Countess nor her male associate had rooms at any of the local hotels, according to a round-up just finished. If they have permanent quarters here, they likely enough have similar fixed stations all over the country. Well, I think we have talked a writer person. Like most of that class, enough, let us get down to the real business that brings us here-the documents

> "Wait a moment," cried Monte, excitedly, "something queer is happening." His gaze was transfixed upon the table where he had placed the three blue prints and the small sheet of gray note paper marked with the cross. On one side of the documents an open ebony humidor from its several compartments offered choice Havanas and the rarest of Oriental cigarettes. A siphon and some empty glasses spoke the hospitality of a well-filled cut glass decanter.

> All this was revealed to the small circle by a powerful shaded electric lamp that threw a shaft of pure daylight upon the papers, and objects within range, which the young multimillionaire had turned in as the Secret Service man talked.

Before bringing out the documents which cost him $5000, Monte had had the old butler move the table closer up to the blazing hearth. The log sputtered and crackled while the heat filled the room. Monte rubbed his eyes repeatedly. He glowered and gesticulated. His stare was rooted at the gray notepaper. "Look! Look!" he hoarsely continued "Watch that cross. See! It is filling up with new marks and characters."

It was. Characters and marks had risen magically upon the surface of the paper. In the spaces between the lines which hitherto had appeared immaculately gray, new lines of characters and marks were gradually becoming more and more visible, until at last when fully distinct, there were no spaces left between the old lines, and the cross looked like this: "Black art !" ejaculated Agent W.

"I'm simply flabbergasted," voiced An

MRS. DAVID H. WRIGHT

Translator and a Protector of Dumb Animals

The death of Mrs. David Henry Wright occurred yesterday at the Maldstone a little before noon after a lingering illness. Last autumn Mr. and Mrs. Wright closed Banksmere, their home at Riverton, and took an apartment at the Maidstone, thinking that the winter in town would benefit Mrs. Wright, but her health did

Anna Heylin Wright was a descendent of Peter Heylin, who was for many years Prebendary of Westminster Abbey. She was a lifelong member of St. Clement's Church, and for many years a parish visitor, belonging to St. Margaret's Sisterhood. It was largely through her efforts that the shooting of live pigeons from traps in New Jersey was declared illegal and the law was upheld after many ap-

Mrs. Wright also translated from the French the pamphlet written by Henri Dunant, which caused the origin of the Red Cross societies not only in Europe but all over the world. This translation has a foreword written by ex-President

William H. Taft. In 1913, Mrs. Wright sent out 800 copies of an appeal to the Protestant Episcopal Convention to have a prayer for kindness to dumb animals included in the Litany of that Church.

For this appeal she received letters of approval from 30 Bishops of the Church. She was also instrumental in obtaining upward of 10,000 names to petitions to President Wilson and Secretary of War Garrison in favor of the Penn Mem Bridge to connect this city with C She is survived by her husband. with Camden

Frank Delaplain Green Frank Delaplain Green, a member of the soda water manufacturing firm of Robert M. Green & Co., 1413 Vine street, is dead at his home, 244 South 45th

Death occurred following an illness of five weeks. Mr. Green was 45 years old. Although born in Chester County, he spent virtually all his life in this city. He came of one of the old families of Chester County, and could trace his ancestry back to William Penp's fellow passengers. Green was a prominent member of the Masonic fraternity in the William L. Elkins Lodge. He was a member of the Sons of American Revolution, the Society of the War of 1812, and the Society of the Colonial Wars. Three sons and three daughters survive him.
