It certainly shows the proper sort of feeling on the part of the Bayard Bowles to have recalled their invitations to a dinner tonight because of the sad death of Gertrude Tower. She was to have been one of the guests, and the young people who were to enjoy the party are doubtless glad that it has been called off, for a shadow of great sadness has fallen over all who knew Miss Tower and the young Dougherty man who is now hovering between life and death in the Germantown Hospital, unable to say anything in defense of himself, that is, his personal responsibility in the accident. The world is quick to judge, and many cruel things have been said of this young fellow because he was running the car too fast. It seems to me it would be far kinder to walt and hear his explanation, If indeed he will ever be able to give it. Who knows but that the brakes would not work when applied or some other accident to the machine may acces at for the whole thing? Nothing can bring her tack, and it seems unnecessarily cruel to condemn her companion unheard, especially when the very fact of having driven the car in which she was killed, whether through his carelessness or not. will be enough to sadden his entire life. If there was carelessness, I am the last use to condone it; but if not, why throw mud at one who is faid low?
