HUNTINGDON VALLEY WIZARDS LOOK GOOD TO KEEP CROWN FOR CLUB TEAM GOLF TITLE

Present Champions Have Chance to Continue Monopoly. Stranger at Pocono

By SANDY McNIBLICK TOMORROW 40 hand-picked delegates from four different golf clubs will go to grips for the team championship of the Philadelphia Golf Association.

Among those present will be a small squad of gray-haired and otherwise veterans representing Huntingdon Valley. Not many new faces will be found in its ranks. It's something like a million-dollar infield. It grinds out victories. It now holds the championship belt and it does not intend for a minute to let go.

Then there's an entirely new squad of golfers who will enter the title tomorrow over the course of the Philadelphia Country Club.

This is the phoetors from Aronimink who have entered their way into the match play by finishing only three shots behind Huntingdon Valley, the champions. This new group of golfers may stir up the still waters of the annual meet.

But it looks as though the principal contest for the cup will be as of yore, between Huntingdon Valley and the Philadelphia Country Club, which latter will be playing on its home course.

The Country Club led all the rest home in the qualifying round when it was 28 strokes better than the nearest club, or an average of four strokes better to the man.

There will be four-ball play in the morning and single matches in the afternoon tomorrow and the next day.

Most fans feel that Huntingdon Valley will continue on its sunny way as champions over another year. The team will be led by Cameron B. Buxton, fresh from his triumph in the individual championship of the city. He is playing a brand of golf that none of the locals seems to be able to copy.

M. C. Burton, tromper of Sidney Sharwood, and Hugh Willoughby, former champion, in picking up a great lot and should have the confidence to bowl over an adversary or two.

George W. Elkins, Jr., is another Huntingdon Valley man who has been showing many experts a pair of heels lately and he will be a big asset to the team.

There are few golfers capable of beating Harold McFarland right now and he may play No. 2 for the champions. Dr. Simon Carr, Richard Mott, Dr. M. K. Neller, H. H. Francis, Wirt Thompson, Walter Pfeil and others will make up a formidable line and it will take some very heavy cannonading to shatter their chances.

A Big Man, a Little Mountain This will be the nineteenth crack at the title. Merlon won it in 1907, the first year the bunting was shaken out. Huntingdon Valley has won it 12 times and the Country Club the other eight.

Cecil Calvert, who cleaned up all kinds of tournaments last year and was the star of the season, greeted many friends at Aronimink this week, and said he was in elegant shape for another season on the links.

They tell a story about an enormous man who appeared at a course in the Poconos a couple of years ago and after

'Cap' Huston Wants Former Mackman to Cover Up for Gilhooley

By CHANDLER D. RICHTER

When Manager Mack, of the Athletics, handed Rube Oldring his unconditional release he took it for granted that the famous outfielder was in reality through with baseball, but if a hurried trip from Washington to Shiloh, N. J., this morning results as expected, the former Mackman will be in the line-up of the New York American League team when it takes the field at Washington tomorrow.

Part Owner and Vice President 'Cap' Huston called Manager Mack on the long distance phone from Washington yesterday afternoon and asked the Athletics' manager if he would be willing to make a trade for Oldring. Mack replied that he could not make a trade for Oldring, because the latter had been given his unconditional release and therefore was no longer the property of the club.

Mack impressed upon Huston that Oldring had assured him that he would not consent to any trade, as he really desired to retire from the game and that the brilliant outfielder was given his unconditional release only because Mack felt certain that there was no chance for any other manager or owner to induce him to return to the game.

Huston asked Mack if he could have the consent of the Athletics to dicker with Oldring, and was told to go as far as he liked. Mack says that his one reason in giving Huston consent to dicker with Oldring was to assure the fans that he had made no attempt to dispose of Oldring's services on the market.

If Mack desired to trade or sell Oldring, he could have made a profitable deal, but he insists that he is through selling ball players and that he will give away any player who is not satisfied with conditions at Shibe Park. Had Mack desired he could have got in touch with Oldring and made a large sum of money by selling him to New York, but the local leader gave Huston full consent to dicker with Oldring for nothing.

Mack points out that Oldring is a free agent and that he is through selling ball players and that he will give away any player who is not satisfied with conditions at Shibe Park.

agent and can do just as he pleases about signing, and that the Athletic club will not resent any action he might take. The wizard manager believes that Oldring has several years of good ball left in him if he puts his mind on the game, forgetting farm life, and would rather see the brilliant outfielder with another team in retirement before he has passed his prime.

It has been rumored about Philly for several days that Oldring would be seen in a Phillies uniform when the team returned home, but the big outfielder declares that he did not dicker with the Phils and does not intend to, as he is perfectly contented on his farm.

According to the rumor, which comes from an authentic source, 'Chief' Bender, Oldring's old roommate and pal, had talked the matter over with him upon learning that he was a free agent, and that the outfielder was given until the National League champions returned home to make up his mind.

While Oldring really desired to retire, it is believed that he would welcome a chance to play with a winning team and that his retirement was hastened because of the poor showing of the Mackmen this season.

Manager Donovan and 'Cap' Huston discussed the advisability of signing Oldring while the Yankees were in this city, but as the team was going along in good shape and Maisei was expected back in the game soon, it was decided to let the matter drop. When the Yankees played an exhibition game in Baltimore on Sunday Donovan learned that Maisei will not be able to play again this season, as his broken collar-bone was not set properly and had to be broken over again.

To make matters worse for the Yankees, Frank Gilhooley, who has been playing brilliant ball throughout the season, broke his right leg sliding into third base in the 11th inning of Monday's game in Washington and will be out of the game for at least six weeks. This makes it imperative that a star outfielder be got at once and Huston left Washington this morning to try to secure Oldring's signature to a contract.
