Commanderies in City and State With the advent of warmer weather there is a natural diminution in the number of candidates received by commanderies and a lessening in the applications to State headquarters for dispensations for class initiations. Notwithstanding this fact, such has been the increase during the spring and earlier months of the year that the order now rejoices in a record gained of more than 40,000 members in Pennsylvania. This represents the high-water mark in Pennsyl-vania and is a source of much jubilation among the officers and members.

Evening Ledger Contest Brings Out Writers Who Dramatize Familiar Spots

By the Photoplay Editor

The first week of the Evening Labour. cenario Contest, which Philadelphia aspirants for photoplay honors might have been expected to devote merely to mental preparedness, brought a number of vital and filmable scripts to the Scenario Editor's desk. A hundred-dollar cash prize, added to production under the supervision of the Metro Company, had too great a lure for many an impatient writer.

On the first Monday after the contest terms were announced, a scenario which met the conditions in every regard came to hand. It utilized for its settings such wellknown spots as Rittenhouse Square, the Frankford Arsenal, a downtown department store, a ball park, the LEDOER office, Fairmount Park, the Orthordox Street Church, etc. A shop girl and a fire chief figured prominently in the action. Someone must have sat up all night Saturday. for the script bore marks of hard work, and within 24 hours of announcement of the contest satisfied the conditions as to places presented.

Only one of the scripts received in the first week failed to meet the terms of the contest. The author frankly admitted that the scenario had been written some time before, but forgot or ignored the fact that no alterations had been made to bring in Philadelphia localities and people.

All the other scripts showed a real acquaintance with the city and its photoplay ossibilities. One of them utilized Penn's statue on City Hall with a great deal of deverness. Many of them added spots about own which the Scenario Editor had omitted from his list of requirements, but which he had indicated would increase the worth of a

Police Court Chronicles Bill Ferry is regarded as an authority on

Bill Ferry is regarded as an authority on fishing down in the Neck.

He knows every stream worthwhile, and what's more, claims to know every fish in it. It annoys Bill when he sees a stranger angling in the streams of that vicinity. He says they have no right to invade those precincts with fancy poles and reels and fancy batt when the natives are satisfied with the ordinary line and a worm.

When a fancy looking following a says in the says work and says in the says in

When a fancy looking fellow in a linen suit cast his line in a stream down near Stone House lane, Bill emphasized his dis-approval by fishing dangerously near. As Approval by lishing datagerously hear. As a result there was a constant tangle of lines. When these complications happened three or four times the stranger told Bill to "beat it,"

Bill looked at him with disgust, and then Bill looked at him with disgust, and then to show his contempt, dropped a heavy stone in the stream directly in front of the strange angler. He was drenched with mud and water. He attacked Bill with his fishing pole, but Ferry took it away from him and broke it into bits. Both men were struggling on the edge of a stream when a mounted cop came along. He pried the men apart and took Bill before Magistrate Baker.

The judge remembered that Bill had been the judge remembered that Bill had been before him quite often. He was tired of doling out advice, and to show the champion fisherman of the Neck that he must obey the law, he was allowed to rest for five days in the county prison.
