

WEDNESDAY

July 19, 1916

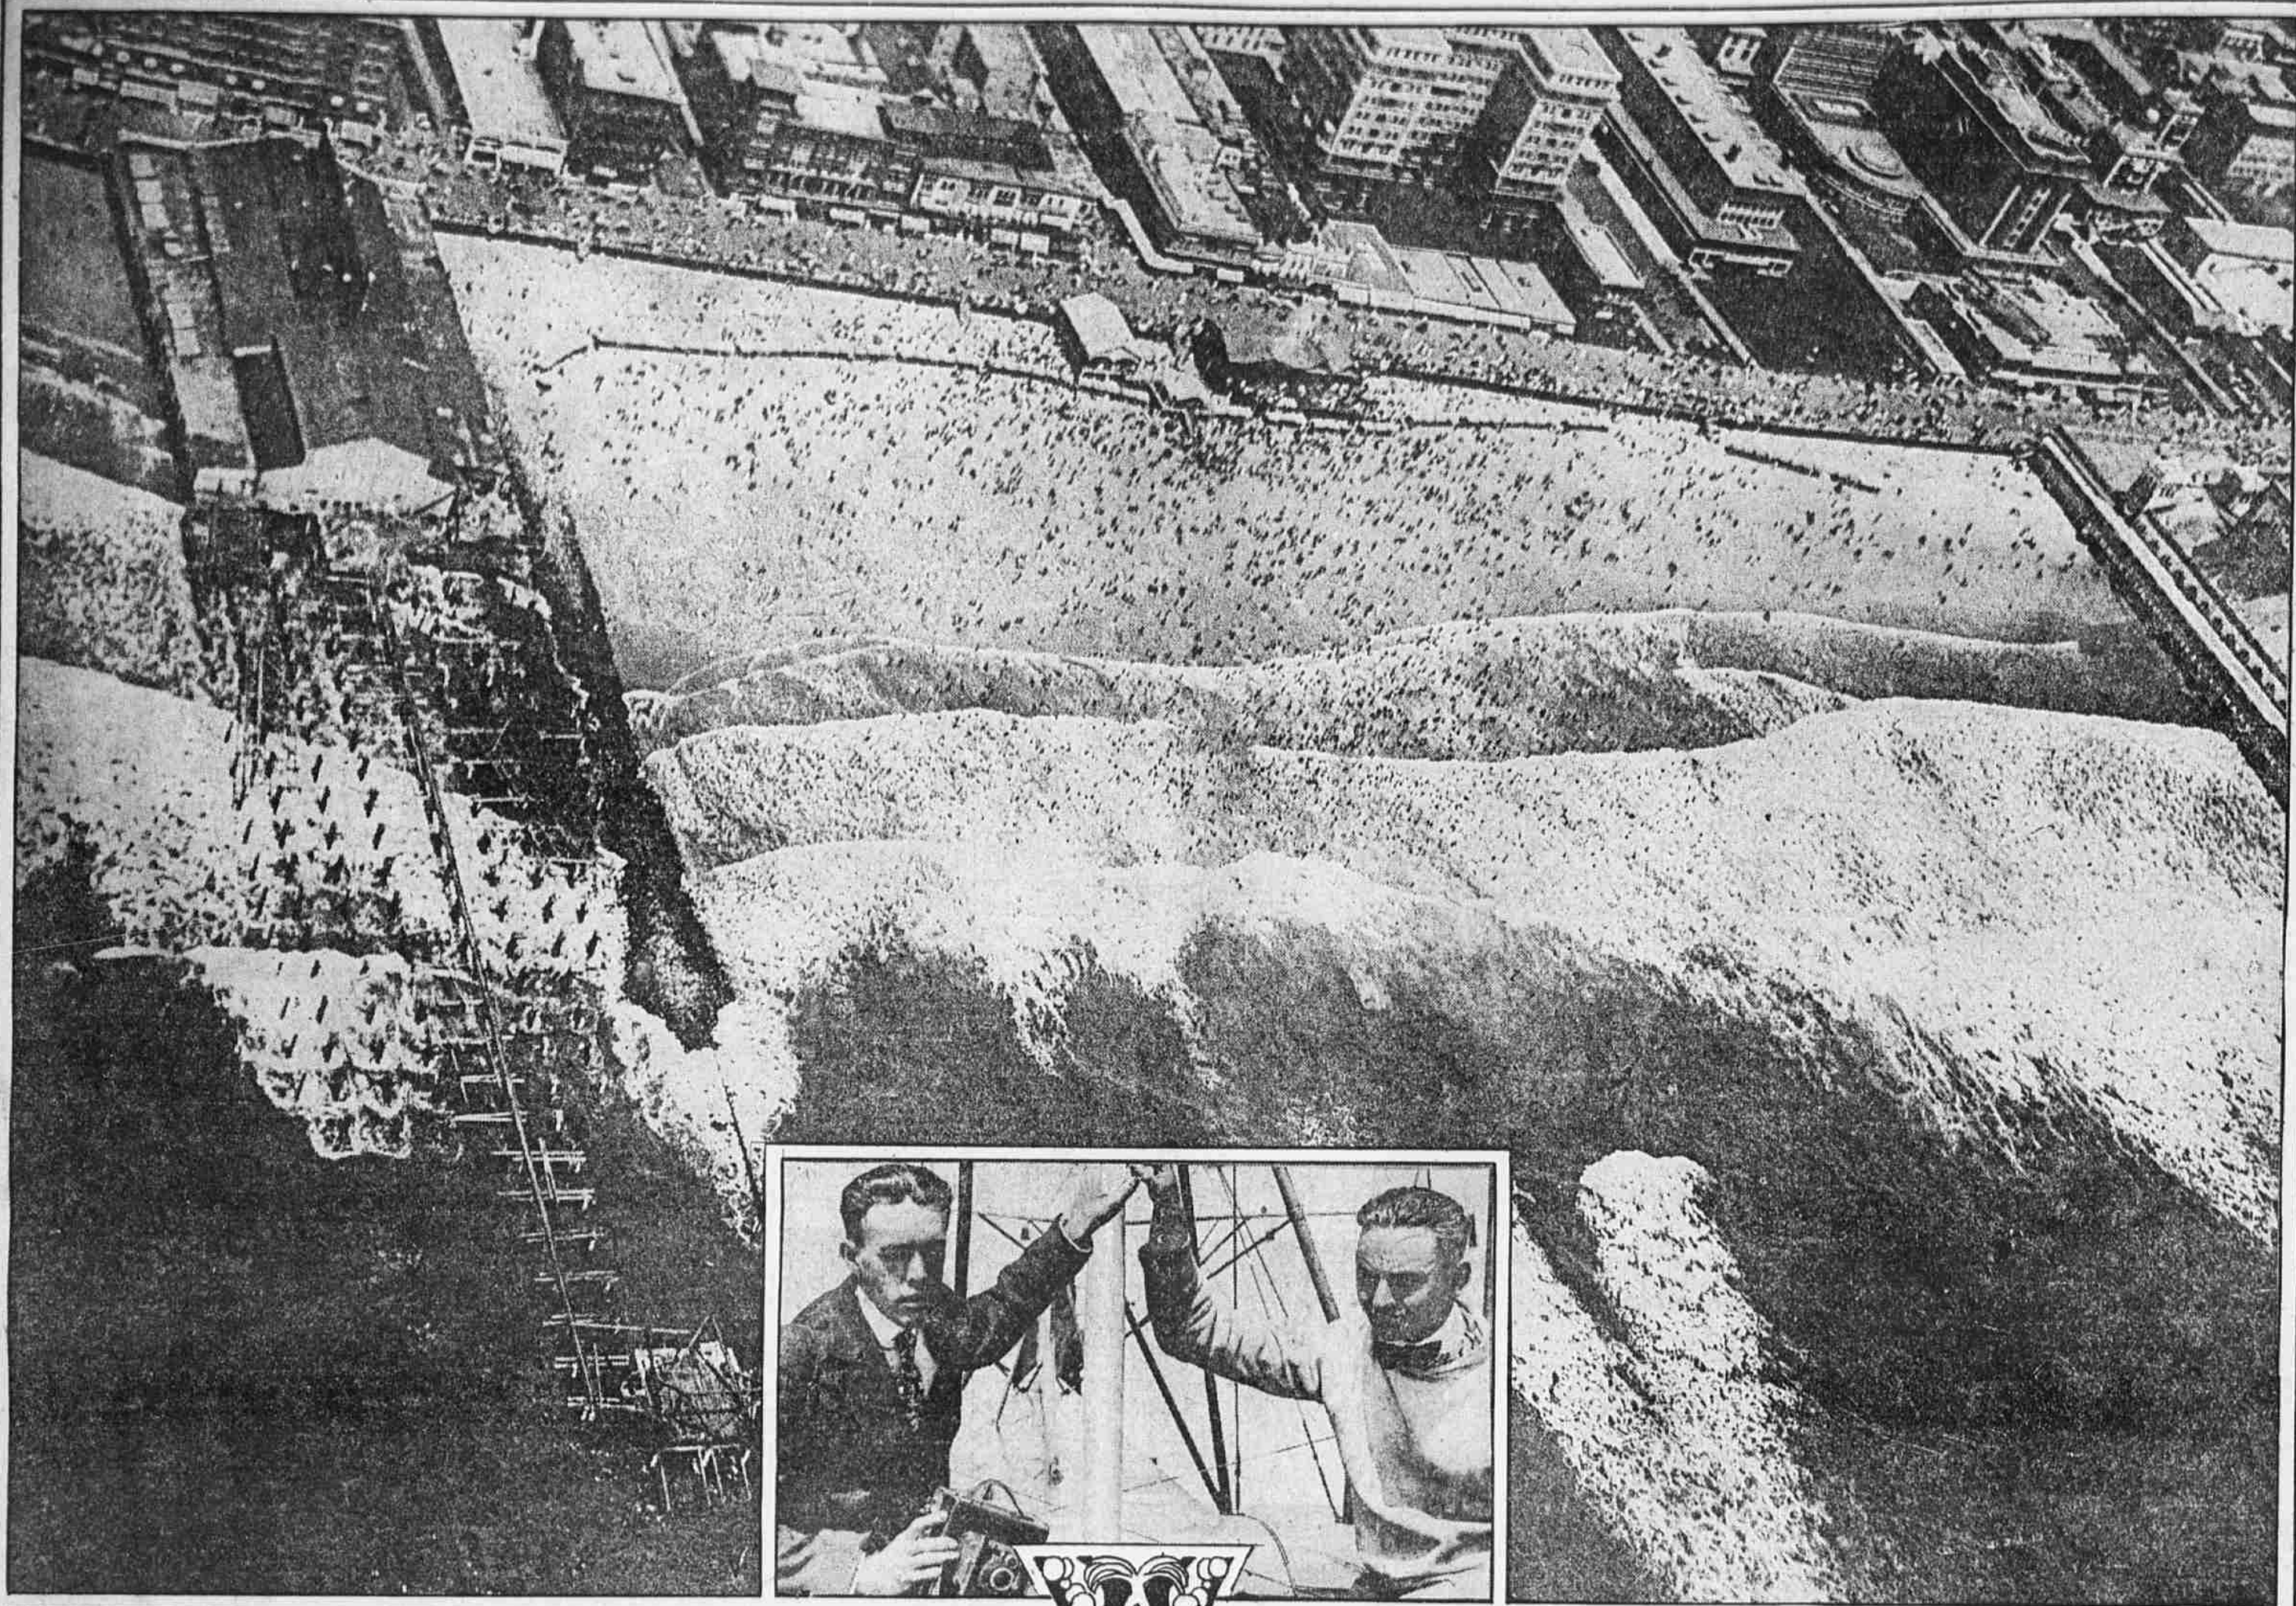

ILLUSTRATED

Evening Ledger

WEDNESDAY

July 19, 1916

LOOKING DOWN ON ATLANTIC CITY AND ITS BATHING THOUSANDS FROM AN AEROPLANE HIGH IN AIR

EVENING LEDGER STAFF PHOTOGRAPHER SAILS OVER THE TOWN BY THE SHORE ALL THE WAY FROM THE CENTRAL HOTEL DISTRICT TO THE INLET. OBTAINING NEW VIEWS FROM ON HIGH

Above is a hawk's-eye sweep of the bathing centre of Atlantic City. The myriad dots which speckle the beach and water like so many swarming gnats are all bathers. The broad white streaks, of course, are the foaming breakers. Further out, toward the lower left of the picture, the surf has formed itself into an almost perfect V, with crowns of white caps. On the left is Young's old pier, jutting out into the ocean. On the right a portion of Steeplechase Pier is visible. The lower picture at the left shows the winding Inlet, the yacht pier and the baseball grounds. On the right is a view looking eastward along Atlantic avenue, the aeroplane being almost over the Inlet. The dark spire in the left background is the lighthouse. Inset in the upper picture are the photographer and the aviator, Beryl Kendrick, who has a summer hydroplane station at the shore.