SHE STOLE MIKE'S HEART AWAY, NOW MIKE'S WRITING POETRY

But Mike Can "Lick" Anybody in Georgia to Win This Fair Southern Beauty

Met Her on Atlantic's Sandy Shores, but Even So She Is True to Her Beau at Home

Nellie Riley stole big "Mike" Devine's heart away and went back home to Georgia. That is the entire story, except for some details which have to do with Devine looking at the moon as he walks his beat in West Philadelphia, writing poetry, repeating for days on his day off and coveting that can "the" baker or Baker in the state of Georgia.

No one can deny that Devine is in love—"Mike" Devine, whom woman had fallen for about a year ago in pretty Nolite Riley, who owns a military shop in Atlanta, Ga. He would not have to admit it, says Lieutenant Ben Savage, of the Thirty-ninth street and Lancaster avenue police station.

Devine is waiting for the answer to his plea, made while he and pretty Nellie Riley were sitting on the banks watching the waves come washing into shore. He knows there is a "some one" else, either a baker or a Baker—he doesn't know which—down in Atlanta. But he's hoping. And he says he would go down to Georgia, and would every baker by trade and Baker by name in the State if that would help his suit. His friends agree that he could do it, for he is a 2 1/2 inch of muscle is topped by a shock of red hair, and everybody knows how a red-headed man can fight. All his 21 years on the force Devine has been known as "scraper" and a "big" toucher.

But he's a very gentle of late. His dreams of Nellie Riley, with her Irish blue eyes and her black hair, have set him to writing poetry, an art which he's cultivated from his boyhood in his "Ladies' Hall," the rhymes of which he composed while walking his beat and the words of which he wrote down on the walls of corner buildings by the light of an arc lamp.

THEY MET AT THE BEACH. FROM GEORGIA. or he said, "I want to be in Atlanta where, where those fellows assembled from places near and far." I then saw the man who stole my heart away, languid on the Atlantic bay. And by a friendly introduction I did obtain her name. And slowly I inquired from her from whence she came. Said she, "I came from Georgia State, that fair land, and for recreation I have strayed to the Atlantic strand."

NEEDED A WIFE. The other "coppers" at the station house say that "Mike" decided recently, when he was frying some eggs in the back kitchen, that he needed a wife. He went to sleep, and the next thing he knew was that he had a dozen birds flying over his head, tramping up the steps in response to an alarm turned in by neighbors who saw the smoke.

General Gregg bore a conspicuous and heroic part in the battle of Gettysburg as commander of a cavalry division.

MISS NELLIE RILEY OFFICER MICHAEL DEVINE

WELSH STRAWBRIDGE MARRIED IN HOLLAND

Society Here Surprised by Wedding of Banker, Club Member and Horseman

Philadelphians learned today that Welsh Strawbridge, erstwhile popular bachelor, banker, horseman, polo player and clubman, had gone to Rotterdam to get married. His bride was, until August 16, the date of the wedding, Miss Irene B. Thomas, of Dresden, Germany, where she has been living for three years with an aunt.

When Mr. Strawbridge went to Europe a month ago he took no one into his confidence about his plans except his mother, Mrs. George Strawbridge, with whom he lived at Wissinicki avenue and Westview street, Germantown. His father, an eminent ophthalmologist, died several years ago.

John Strawbridge said today that he felt quite sure his brother was not engaged when he left last July. No details of the wedding were given in the cablegram, he explained.

The bridegroom has the reputation of being one of Philadelphia's most daring cross-country riders and has ridden many winners at steeplechase events about this city and New York. He has been injured several times, when thrown in racing.

One bath: $200 bail! Such was the decision of Magistrate Baker today when he discharged 15-year-old John Carr, 2223 Dickinson street, into the custody of his mother and fixed bail at that amount to insure the lad's keeping the peace.

"THE PRUSSIAN WAR" BY LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE "THE Author of 'THE BRASS BOWL'"

CHAPTER XVIII. The Darkness Made Light.

THE night air was cold and still. A heavy frost was settling upon the country. No wind stirred, and the quiet was intense. The barking of a dog miles away came to us with wonderful distinctness. We walked in silence up and down on the driveway near the lodge, within the gates, each deep in meditation, the gravel crunching heavily beneath our feet.

"You've no intention of backing out?" he asked bluntly. "Not in the least. You are to state the case," I said, "and we will do our part."

"I failed to understand precisely what he was about, but it was soon made clear that he was not to be trifled with."

"I am not a man of high renown, and very well I would wish you to equal could I obtain your name."

NEEDED A WIFE. The other "coppers" at the station house say that "Mike" decided recently, when he was frying some eggs in the back kitchen, that he needed a wife.

READING, Pa., Aug. 24.—The will of General D. McE. Gregg, late of this city, was filed for probate with the Orphan's Court here today, comprising of an estate of more than $20,000.

THE BRIDGE. The bridegroom has the reputation of being one of Philadelphia's most daring cross-country riders and has ridden many winners at steeplechase events about this city and New York.

FARMER SMITH'S RAINBOW CLUB THE SIMPLE THINGS OF LIFE I hope, my dear children, it is not too late to tell you how sorry we all should be that our very good friend James Whitcomb Riley will write for us no more.

Germany's Financial Situation THE closing of our borders to exports and imports has been of the greatest benefit to German banking.

GERMANY is fighting the war on the tribal plan. She is buying no munitions and few food-stuffs from abroad. German money remains in Germany.
