Republican business and professional men of this city were a unit today in pre-dicting that the Republican victory in the Maine elections forecast a great reunited Republican party and a nation-wide sweep for Hughes and Fairbanks. They were particularly gratified with the Progressive yore, declaring that it indicated a steady return to the narry.

vote, declaring that it in the Progressive vote, declaring that it indicated a steady return to the party. Democrats, on the other hand, claimed the result of the election meant little or nothing. To strengthen their arguments they pointed to the fact that the State, after giving a Republican majority in Sep-tember, 1913, proved one of President Wil-son's strongholds in November of the same year, barely two months later. James Pollock, Roosevelt enthusiast, mail: "The victory in Maine indicates that the Roosevelt crowd have rejoined the party. The Maine sweep is a pretty good promise that Hughes will carry every Re-publican State, and will be elected Presi-dent of the United States." "Ton't think it forecasts anything," said Robert S. Bright, president of the Demo-cratic Club. "In 1912 the Republican guber-natorial candidate and other State candi-dates received a plurality as big as that claimed he the Benethlers to such as the majority. "More than three-fourths of the Progress

sives in Pennsylvanta, i believe, already have gone back into the Republican party, and in November this State will roll up a big vote for Hughes." FLYING START TO VIOTORY

Congressman George P. Darrow said the result of the election in Maine way a flying start toward a Republican victory. The fact that the Governor, two United States Senators and four Congressmen were elected on the Republican ticket, he declared, shows the trend of the public mind. "The fight in Maine," he said, "was made almost a national lange and each side put

"The fight in Maine," he said, "was made almost a national issue and each side put its best talent in the field. A Republican victory, in view of such a contest, indicates that the people are thinking about a change. It must be remembered that the Democrats made a dasperate effort to win." Walter George Smith, Democrat, who recently dediared for Hughes, said: "The Maine election indicates the trend of popular sentiment against the administration. It
