

PASTOR'S WIFE HIT HIM WITH FRIED MACKEREL, SERVANT GIRL ASSERTS

Then Rev. John Triplett's Glasses Fell into a Bowl of Gravy, Witness Says at Divorce Trial

CAMDEN COURT CROWDED

There were many storm scenes in the life of the Rev. John and Dorothy Triplett, of Woodbury, N. J.

One of the most violent places in the Triplett home when Mrs. Triplett, it is said, struck her husband in the face with a fried mackerel, thereby causing his glasses to plunge into a bowl of gravy.

This is a sample of the testimony which was introduced at the airing of the suit for divorce which the clergyman brought against his wife.

The mackerel episode was mentioned by Carrie Schaaf, a former servant. She said Mrs. Triplett threw the fish at her husband when he was visiting them. Later, according to the witness, Mrs. Triplett stood before the door of the room occupied by the visitors and called them "spongers."

THREATEN TO BREAK DOOR. Carrie Schaaf said Mrs. Triplett was often in bad humor. "She called him a fool," said the witness, "and encouraged her daughter, Doris, to make fun of Mr. Triplett when he said grace. She also objected to his being alone in his study. One time she threatened to break the door down with an axe."

Although Mrs. Triplett often complained about the meals, she admitted, the witness said, that these complaints were made because they caused Mr. Triplett to make a funny face.

Miss May Blake, another witness, said the defendant often made her husband get his own breakfast and told him she was tired of his "old hen" parties.

This caused a hum of disapproval in the court, as there were several women present who had visited the Triplett home. Several witnesses for the clergyman said that Mrs. Triplett frequently complained of the "slow life" in Woodbury.

Henry V. Rogers, of Woodbury, said that Mrs. Triplett told him she wanted to get away from the dear old ladies in the religious society. "I don't like being a minister's wife," Mrs. Triplett was quoted as having told the witness. "I can't act the way I like to and I don't want to mix in with the straight-laced church people. I can't even look cross-eyed in Woodbury without accounting for it. If I had a husband who had some get up and go about him he would get another church and not keep me in a Jersey town. My mother wanted to get me married young. I made a mistake; I could have made a better marriage if I had waited."

PAID A SOCIAL CALL. Rogers said this conversation took place when he paid a social call at the summer home of Mrs. Triplett's mother, Margaret Nelson, at Kids Islands, of the Thousand Islands.

Cross-examination by Edward Wilson, attorney for Mrs. Triplett, revived the witness's memory and he added many other statements. Rogers said Mrs. Triplett frequently found fault with her husband because he couldn't raise flowers on a patch of ground near the house.

Mrs. Florence Evans said that Mrs. Triplett complained because the clergyman brought his mother to their home in October, 1912, according to the witness, she also objected to the keeping of chickens in the cellar.

"I pulled his hair good," said Mrs. Triplett, according to Mrs. Evans, "I have a temper, and I get it from my mother. I'd rather have my bad temper than his. I get mine over with. He keeps his in and shakes."

CITY WILL SAVE ON LIGHTING

Will Install One Thousand Electric and Gas Lamps

The reduction of rates charged for electric lighting by the Philadelphia Electric Company and the changing of many gas lamps to electric will result in a saving to the city of approximately $130,000 in the 1917 lighting bills.

Officials of the Bureau of Lighting estimate the saving on the basis that the city will install 1000 additional gas lamps and several hundred more electric lights during the next twelve months. If these increases had not been decided upon the saving would be correspondingly greater.

Bids for the 1917 gas lighting contract will be opened November 8. The Webbach Street Lighting Company of America for many years has been the only bidder. This year $589,235 was appropriated for this bill and $485,000 is asked for 1917.

HIGH SCHOOL GIRLS LIKE "CHICKEN CHORUS"

Mrs. Nichols Makes Comparison in Discussing Low Waists and Short Skirts

DENVER, Col., Oct. 26.—If the chicken chorus in some girls' skirts were transferred from the stage into some school-room and seated before a few books and teachers the effect would be not unlike that of the modern class of high school girls, in the opinion of Mrs. B. E. Nichols, a delegate to the State Mothers' Congress, now in convention here.

Mrs. Nichols regrets that skirts now are worn so short that curbstone detectives nearly always can tell when the girls have holes in their stockings.

"High school girls these days wear their waists too low and their skirts too high," said Mrs. Nichols. "They go to school dressed like nymphs in a Greek dance and they paint and powder like Comanches on the warpath. They ponder over algebra to the rattle of silk and satin dresses."

"Why?" To attract the attention of the boys, I suppose. A good many of them spend more time thinking about the boys

They always fit differently. If you could only stand around here while men are buying a Suit or an Overcoat and listen to the comments they make to a friend about the armhole comfort, about the collar snugness, about the way a Perry Coat seems to glide into its place without pulling or hauling—if you could only do that, we'd not have to write this advertisement to ask you to come in and see for yourself.
