YOUR LIBRARIAN My dearest Children-Do you not think it ungrateful of those who have the advantage of a free library and do not use it?

Many great men have waiked miles to borrow books-have worked, slaved, saved in order to buy books. -YOU have but to get a card and call at the nearest library-be sure to ride in a stuffy street car-paying fare both ways, and remembering how Lincoln walked three miles to school and home again.

Remember how Gladstone loved to walk. If you do not know what to read, ask the librarian. She is usually a softvoiced, pleasant-faced lady who knows all, sees all and speaks low. SHE has explored the wonders of Bookland-she knows where the fairies are and will show you where to find them. SHE will tell you where to find the heroes and heroines of history, who sleep so peacefully each night on the shelves of the library. SHE will help you with your studies, showing you how to read books that tell of your wonderful studies. Or SHE will tell you the stories which will provide recreation (re-creation) Get acquainted with YOUR LIBRARIAN. If you know her, get botter acquainted and oblige, yours lovingly, FARMER SMITH, Children's Editor.

The Wonderful Clock

P. S .-- You might tell me about your librarian.

There was once a little girl named Marien. She received a birthday present from an uncle of here. It was a clock. The clock not only struck the hours, half hours and quarter hours, but attached to it was a pretty contrivance which also noid the time. On the front of the clock, just a little below the dist, was a sprig of a resebud. It was beautifully made of metal and on it just after the hour had sounded there was a large green resebud. At a quarter past the hour the bud opened a little, so that red petals could be seen. Fifteen minutes later it was almost a full blown rose. A quarter of an hour after this it was fully blown. Just before the hour the rose opened to its fullest extent and remained that way duttl the clock had finished striking. Then it immediately shut up into a green bud reads. BY GOLDIE GOLDHERG

MISTER ELEPHANT HAS A PLAN

By Farmer Smith

"Wife! Wife, come here quick!"
It was Mister Elephant speaking. His good wife was mixing dough at the time, so she had to run to the window, the dough still sticking in her hands.

"What 18 the matter" she exclaimed. raising the window and getting the beauti-ful, clean sill all covered with dough. "Matter! Just look what has happened!"

"I don't see anything that has hap-pened," answered Mrs. Elephant. "Look! Can't you see? The rope has gone down the well." Mrs. Elephant put down the window and orticed that she had left some of her precious dough right where she did not want it. She was a very good housekeeper,

When the good wife turned from the indow to go out the door she smelled omething burning. "My, oh me!" she exclaimed as she ished into the kitchen. "Mother! I suy, where are you?" Mister Riephent began to jump up and down, first on one foot and then on the other, "Mother, do come. I need help " in her excitement Mrs. Elephant burned her fingers, and when her husband turned around to leak for her he heard "Duch! Could!" coming from the house. This was too much for him and he rushed into the ing in the world will not get a rope out of a well.

"I thought it was your motto never to have both of us worrying about the same thing at the same lime?" Mrs. Elephant was covering the burne with baking soda.

"You always have to come to your wife when you are in trouble. Why don't you say you are sorry because I burned myself?"

"Wife, dear. I am sorry you burned your "ittle tootsie woosse finners. Let me kiss 'um and make 'um welt?"

Mister liberhant put his arms around his wife and then kinsed the burne.

"Wow!" he exclaimed. "I got my mouth your or haking sods.

"Now you run along and fish your rope out yourself—don't bother me, and if you are not strong enough get killy flumpus—life and do anything and he never bothers his wife or makes her burn her fingers."

"Graat idea," said Mister Fluphant as it rushed to the telephone.
