MURDERED GIRL'S SUIT MAY SOLVE MYSTERY

Garments Disappeared Same Night She Vanished—Shoes Important Clue, Too

PONTIAC, Ill., Nov. 16.—Upon a simple tailored blue walking suit may depend the solution of the murder of Miss Christine Diemer, whose body with broken neck and fractured skull was taken from the Vermillion river here following her disappearance October 27. Her father, mother and sister are under $10,000 bail, pending action by a grand jury.

The suit was worn by Miss Diemer while she was being treated at a sanitarium. She became obsessed with the idea that it was contaminated and demanded that it be burned. On the night she disappeared the suit went, too. It was not on her body when it was found. The theory is advanced by the family that she went to the river, 100 yards from her home, to destroy the suit during the night and was attacked by some one and slain. Search is being made for the suit along the river banks and in the water.

A blood-stained club with hairs clinging to it may prove the weapon with which she was killed. Her brother, Ray, turned it over to the coroner, explaining he found it two days after his sister disappeared. Not knowing she had been slain, he thought nothing of it, until the body was found. A pair of woman's shoes coated with mud such as that of the river bank was found on the porch of the Diemer home. The family declared the shoes had been in the basement for a long time and recently had been brought out and never worn.

WELL-KNOWN AUTHORESS DIES

Molly Elliot Seawell, Writer of Historical Romances, Expires

WASHINGTON, Nov. 16.—Molly Elliot Seawell, author of widely read historical romances and stories for young persons, is dead here. She was fifty-six years old.

Molly Elliot Seawell was a well-known novelist, not only because her novels and stories were widely read, but because she had won a number of prizes in contests that attracted much attention. In 1890 she won a prize of $500 offered by the Youth's Companion with her "Little Jarvis," and in 1895 she won another prize of $3000 in a competition conducted by the New York Herald with her "Sprightly Romance of Marsac," which afterward was dramatized. With a short story, "John Mainwaring, Financier," she won $1000 in another competition of the New York Herald.
