Jack and the Fairy

By IDA LINETT. Pennsgrove street.
Once upon a time there lived a little boy whose name was Jack. His mother and father were very poor. Sometimes Jack didn't get anything to eat. They lived in an old hut on top of the hill. At the bot-tom of the hill was a pool where Jack went aometimes to catch fish.

sometimes to catch fish.

One day, as Jack was sitting near the pool, an old woman came up to him and said, "Will you give me something to eat?" Jack replied, "I haven't much, but I shall give you half of my lunch," When she was through she gave Jack a box and said. "Open this box when you get home. "When he got home and opened the box, what do you think he found? It was full of gold! His mother and father were dazzled and asked him where he got the box of gold. He told them the whole story and how the fairy had told him to open it when he got to me and how she had melted into a cloud. His mother and father took the gold and

BILLY BUMPUS-STAR GAZER By Farmer Smith

"Why don't you be quick about it and ay that you want me to get down your well and see the stars by daylight and hen I will be a wise goat?" asked Billy Sumpus of Mister Elephant. "That's what I am driving at," answered he big fellow. "Well, drive a little harder," replied Billy.

"Well, drive a little harder," replied Billy, taking a squint at the well. "I suppose it would not do any harm for me to bring up your rope when I get down star-gazing, would it?"

"No, indeed. But I wanted you of all the goats I know to have the honor of being a wise goat; a goat who knows EVERYTHING."

"If I were a wise goat now I would know enough not to go down that well, but as I am not a wise goat I guess the only thing for me to do is to go down the well and bring up your rope—amusing myself for a few minutes gazing at the stars."

"That's it!" exclaimed Mister Elephant.
"Strangs I guessed it," said Billy, getting gazcasic.

"Suppose you start now before it get-dark," suggested the big fellow, "Anything to please you," said Billy, "Do you know how to go down a well." asked Mister Elephant.

"There are several ways of going down a well," said Billy; "what particular brand do you prefer?"
"To your own way—I msrely suggest you be careful," Mister Elephant moved closer to the well. the well. That's awful sweet of you to be so anx-

"That's award sweet of you to be so anxijour about me I think I would rather go down the well without having you see me.
You might want to do it yourself if you saw me delag it. Then you would be a wise Elephant—see?"

"But I have no whiskers," replied the big fellow.

"That's a fact—wise ones have whiskers. True, very true. Suppose you run is the house and come back. By the time you get there I will be at the bottom."

Mister Flephant toddled off toward the house, while Blily started down the well. He stretched his four legs out almost straight and worked his way down the well.

When he reached the bottom of Mister Elephant's well, he found about half a foot of water. He took a nice cool drink and looked up.
There, far above him, he saw the twin-sling stars and—the two boady eyes of Mister Elephant. "Now I've got you!" shouted the big
