

USEFUL HINTS FOR WOMAN—LETTERS FROM READERS ON VARIOUS SUBJECTS

WE ARE AGAIN REMINDED OF WOMAN'S INDIRECT INFLUENCE

That "Her Place Is in the Home" and "Doubling Electoral Vote Will Bring No Good Results," the Belief of This Writer

"THE recent extremely close presidential election, in which, especially in the western States, many women participated, and the long delay in receiving authentic returns bring up strongly again the question of whether the woman's vote is of any practical advantage to the country at large or whether it does not only end in increasing the labor of counting the ballots by almost doubling the number of votes, without changing the result.

"It is reasonable to suppose that in the average family, or at least the majority of them, the husband, wife, brother and sister would naturally vote alike; for the obvious reason that their interests are in common. Although, of course, in some instances, there are cases where a father and son are of different political views in general—it is like patriotism—they all think alike, as they are brought up that way.

"Therefore, I contend in the case of woman suffrage as regarding the welfare of the Government and improving present conditions and without denying at all the rights of women (since we all know that there are numerous men and women who, in a number of ways, are totally unfit to vote), simply doubles the amount of ballots without any real good being accomplished in the end.

"By this I mean, especially in the case of married men, to quote the old saying, 'The hand that rocks the cradle is the hand that rules the throne.' In other words, in eighty per cent of the average families the wife naturally shares her husband's political opinions, and in some cases, perhaps, dominates them, since obviously their interests would or should lie in the same plane.

"In conclusion I would say that to my mind woman suffrage, while perfectly legitimate and just, is useless, and simply furnishes a hobby for a few idle women, as the average good housewife and mother has ample employment for her time, aside from any political activities.

The foregoing letter from E. A. St. C. seems to me to demonstrate the crying need there is for suffrage for women, the women who are entirely forgotten in the calculations of the domesticated members of their sex.

And, of course, there are any number of other reasons equally as good for giving women the ballot, one of these being that the percentage of illiteracy is much higher among men in this country. But why not? The question is gradually but surely settling itself.

TODAY'S FASHION

A dainty evening frock of tulle and satin.

THIS charming evening frock is of shell-tulle with an overdrapery of white tulle. The bodice has draped sleeves hanging from the armpits of tiny French roses outlining the low-cut décolletage. The tulle overskirt is of tulle embroidered in silver. A broad grille of antique blue satin has a band of silver ribbon threaded through the center. Clusters of roses in tones of pink, yellow and mauve ornament the corsage and the tulle.

Parting at Morning

Round the caps of a sudden came the sea, And the sun look'd over the mountain's rim; And straight was a path of gold for him, And the need of a world of men for me.

MY MARRIED LIFE

By ADELE GARRISON

What Happened Before the Evening Came

"THERE! Now what do you think of your kitchen crock?"

Dicky stepped back admiringly from the dining table, where he had just finished arranging the flowers he had bought in the course of a run against which I had protested to no avail.

To my housewife mind the idea of a piece of kitchen pottery as a receptacle for flowers was ridiculous, and I had felt much indignation Dicky not only for putting aside my opinion with a careless shrug, as if it were of no importance, but for persisting in carrying the unsightly thing into the dining room and putting the flowers into it.

But as I looked at the yellow daffodils, the white narcissi and the delicate ferns rising out of the dark brown earthenware, I realized the artistic sense that had led Dicky unerringly to select it. Placed carefully within it, some of the blossoms standing proudly upright, others leaning lovingly over the sides of the dish, they looked exactly as if they were rising from the earth where they were grown.

I love flowers so much that the very sight of them makes me, no matter how upset I am. As I gazed at the exquisite blossoms I felt my irritation at Dicky's levity melt away. After all, he had been right about the jar, and I could not believe he had meant to wound me.

I slipped my hand into his arm. "They are lovely, Dicky," I said softly. "I take it all back about the jar. It is the only thing for these blossoms, isn't it?"

"Of course," Dick replied laconically. "Queer, how some of the cheapest, coarsest things of pottery have colorings which are a delight to the eye."

"Dinner all served," announced Katie upon the table, where Dicky had jumbled dishes and silver in a heap to make room for his arrangement of the flowers, and her face grew dark with anger.

stiles of Katie's cream pie, he held out a half dollar to her. "That's in recognition of a mighty good dinner."

"Thank you," rejoined Katie. "I no care if you put dishes on the floor next time."

Dicky frowned slightly as she left the room.

"Too fresh, my dear, that girl," he commented. "Can't you tone her down a little?"

"I felt my old irritation at Dicky's inconsistency rising within me. When he had found that Katie, whom I had engaged as cook, was the girl who had formerly done the housework in the bachelor apartment which he had shared with three other artists, he had been delighted.

"Now I'll have the chance to finish that painting of Poland for which she was posing when she disappeared," he had said to me, and added: "For heaven's sake, Madge, keep her. Put up with anything from her until after I finish that painting."

I remembered the words as if he had just spoken them. The memory of them tinged my speech as I replied:

"You surely do not suppose I like her manner any better than you do? But you told me to put up with anything from her, so that she would stay until after you had finished that painting for which she was posing. There is no surer way of making her angry than to try to 'tone her down,' as you express it. She is positively irrefragable, and, to do the girl justice, I believe it is not freshness, but ignorance and high spirits."

I suppose no man likes to be put in the wrong, and Dicky is a perfectly normal man. So I was not surprised when he took refuge in a shaft of irony.

"Really, this lecture is extraordinarily interesting. If there is any more coming you ought to charge a fee."

I thanked my stars for Katie's entrance at that moment with the coffee. I could not have trusted my voice to answer Dicky, and Katie's presence, of course, solved the difficulty.

"I am afraid you will have to excuse me now," I said quietly after hastily drinking my coffee. "I must get those sandwiches out of the way as early as possible. Can I do anything for you? You might as well have a comfortable time with your papers before Katie has to clear up the living room."

"Nothing to do for me, only to cut up that cheese Katie bought last night into small pieces. Then when you get your table fixed up I'll come out and put all the things for the rabbit on my end of the table. I understand they don't care for the table most of the time, but I'll have the things on the table for them, while Lil and Lester are perfect fends. Harry rather looks askance at them, but I'm sure he isn't being commonplace by indulging, but he likes them just the same."

I walked into the living room, and I turned to Katie.

"I'll help you clear the table, Katie, and then you may bring me the sandwich bread, and all the things I asked you to get last night. I'll make the sandwiches right here. Bring me the can-opener and a sharp knife. Then you may do the dishes."

The table was soon spread with the things. I had opened two or three of the cans and put the contents into dishes when I heard the doorbell ring. Dicky went to the door, and I heard Lillian (Katie's high voice and her husband's deeper tones).

I looked at the clock. It was only half-past 3 in the afternoon. Surely they had not come to stay through the evening at this time!

Usually farmers separate the cream before it is gathered for the creameries. Good and bad, rich and poor, clean and dirty, are all mixed together. When we buy milk, it must measure up to our high standard—no gathered cream for us. MERDALE BUTTER is, and can only be, made from rich, pure milk, whether it is the milk we buy or comes from our own healthy cows. That is why we can guarantee uniform quality—and purity—in Merdale. Blankets Made of Paper

To the Editor of Woman's Page: Dear Madam—Cut brown wrapping paper or old newspapers into strips about three-quarters of an inch wide and eight inches long, sew the strips together with the same stitch which is used in sewing paper. These paper blankets may be used for any purpose for which blankets are used. They are best made by two persons, one covering the other with the strips. The strips laid flat on a table. In this way a blanket can be made in an hour. (Mrs.) J. W. O'C.

Cheaper Cuts of Meat Palatably Cooked

To the Editor of Woman's Page: Dear Madam—With the present high cost of living, when many of us find it necessary to resort to every expedient to make ends meet, the following recipes may prove of interest, as by their use the cheaper cuts of meat can be made as palatable and delicious as the higher-priced ones.

Recipe for baked beefsteak—Take round beefsteak, not too thick cut it in slices or small pieces. Put in roaster, sufficient quantity to cover the bottom. Sprinkle liberally with four salt and pepper, and take some two small slices of butter. Then put in another layer of meat and proceed as before. Continue this process until the meat is all used, not forgetting to sprinkle with salt and pepper. Cover with one-half or four hours, basting with the fat. This will make a delicious and rich beefsteak. The recipe is made as follows: To every cup of four take one teaspoonful of baking powder, one cup of milk and one cup of water. Add to this one cup of salt and one cup of soda. Mix well and form into a loaf. Put in roaster and bake one hour. Add water and salt to this slices of beefsteak. Bake occasionally. Can be served either warm or cold. (Mrs.) E. H. W.

Keeping the Sewing Room Orderly

To the Editor of Woman's Page: Dear Madam—This afternoon I decided to do some sewing. I had cleaned my room, swept, washed and mopped, and I had just begun when I noticed that the sewing machine was on the right-hand side of the sewing table. I had put it on the left-hand side. I was very much surprised. I had just noticed that the sewing machine was on the right-hand side of the sewing table. I had put it on the left-hand side. I was very much surprised. Advertisement for Childs & Company, Cutting the Grocery Bill. Includes a large logo and text: "Cutting the Grocery Bill. That is solely our aim and purpose; and in these days of abnormally inflated values the real helpfulness of our organization is most clearly and distinctively shown. Our stores receive a neighborly welcome wherever located; and they're open for the full purpose of selling every man, woman or child, no matter their station in life, who want to get the very biggest dollar's worth for every hundred pennies of price. Leadership counts very largely when the cause is good and is supported by wide-spread appreciation; and we're doing our very uttermost to keep down the cost of living, in every city and town, in the territory we cover. The modest income or hard-earned weekly wage is carelessly handled, even now, if it doesn't cover the necessities of ordinary comfortable living—and leave a snug something for the bank—IF you have the opportunity of dealing regularly at a Childs Store. Thousands and thousands of families, in four States, are depending on us for this very thing; and they're getting high-grade groceries at lowest possible cost. They've come to know the satisfaction of trading on sure ground, for they realize what 'QUALITY, QUANTITY AND PRICE' mean to the weekly expense account, and they've learned to improve the golden moment of opportunity. Now, this is not 'all talk and no cider.' It's the absolute truth. You can cut great slices out of the grocery bill with care and good management, for carelessness is oftentimes the most costly item; and if you have a tendency, like an oyster, to stick fast to the particular spot in which you happen to be, you'll find it interestingly profitable to study the obvious possibilities of 'QUALITY, QUANTITY AND PRICE.' The highways and byways of grocery buying are very intricate; but there's a street called STRAIGHT, and if you follow along you're sure to come to a Childs Store—'Where Your Money Goes the Farthest' and where exacting taste and every-day prudent economy demand and get ABSOLUTE SATISFACTION. Economy is of itself a great revenue. CHILDS & COMPANY THE STORES OF OPPORTUNITY 'WHERE YOUR MONEY GOES THE FARTHEST'."
