Claus never had the chimes rung without having a special object in mind.

Hurry, hurry, hurry!

Zig Zag went downstairs so fast he fell and humped his nose, but he kept on going, as did they all until they came to the assembly room where Santa Claus always had the good little people of Toytown gather when he wished to speak to them.

When they were all seated, Santa Claus arose from his seat and introduced them to the crow and said:

"My good little trouble maker, Fuss Button, has asked to have a toy rooster made for a little boy down on the speck—I mean, the earth—and so I am here to show you how to make a rooster."

Everybody was attention.

"I hold here in my hand a comb—it has teeth, as you see, but we do not need the teeth, for there never has been a rooster with toeth, but a rooster must have a comb and he must also have a crow. Therefore, I have on my other hand a

This will impress this Thanksgiving season upon your mind with teeth, but a receiver must have a comb-and he must also have a crow. Therefore, I have on my other hand a crow who has been kind enough to offer his services. He has a crow, but first I must obtain his per-mission to use his crow, for after I am through, there will be no more crowing for Mister Crow."

Santa Claus took a large hag and into it he put the crow and the comb. "My!" he exclaimed. "Careisas of me, I have forgot-ten the feathers. Nover mind. Here is a feather duster."

Rig Zag was so excited he stood up on the back seat and poor Professor Waddlepop hurt his neck from stretching it. Into the bag went the comb, the crow and the feather dustor. Out of the bag came a cunning little coaster. The comb was gone, but a crowupped out.

"Caw! Caw!" went the crow.

"Cockey-doodle-doo!" went the rooster.
"Isn't that wonderful!" exclaimed
Peaches and Cream, clapping her hands,
"Quick!" shouted Santa Claus to Puss
Button, as the rooster was about to fly out of the window.
