terial it was a foregone conclusion that my dance frock should be white or black taile. Then I remembered that tuile frocks must have linings of silk, which have the had habit of costing money. My black chiffon velvet afternoon gown had a drop lining. I ripped it from the waist beit and then hurried down town for the black tulk and rimmings.

Luck was with me, for I struck a sale of sequin triuming. I bought three-quarters of a yard of the widest for the girdle, and all that was left of the narrow bands to trim the skirt and bodice.

When I reached the Mereditha I enlisted the services of "Freddle" to act as Teleper." She put on the black slik lining and over it I arranged a double skirt of tulle, the upper one slightly shorter than the lower. Both are quite full.

Then I cut out a very short tunic with four long cascaded points, two in front and two at the back, gathering it full about the top and stitching it firmly to the skirt belt.

Freddis hand-sewed the narrow sequin training about the edges of both skirts and the tunic. There is enough stiffening in the training to distend the tulle just enough to be smart.

When the shirt was finished Freddie took a piece of wide satingribbon and drew it about my waist like a wide girdle. Then i sewed two rows of feather-boning at the back, and two in front, and added the hooks and eyes. This former the foundation for the bodice.

Taking a piece of tulle, I folded it in hori-
