MEDIA CITIZENS ENGAGE IN SEARCH FOR HUGGER

Women and Girls Shun Streets After Nightfall, Fearing Youth's Embraces

Media is crowded today over a "hugger" who is being sought by the police and citizens. Women are afraid to venture upon the streets at night.

Nearly a dozen women and girls have been frightened by the hugger, who succeeded in embracing a few of them before their screams attracted him. Among them are Mrs. John E. McManis, 479 East Twentieth street, wife of a Chester lawyer; Mrs. Joseph Rogers, wife of a Southampton lawyer; Mrs. Mary Matron, a schoolgirl; Miss Patricia Allen, niece of George W. Allen, warden of the Delaware County jail; and Mrs. William Miller.

The police, who expect to apprehend the man, still today that from descriptions they believe he is a foot-and-a-half tall, Italian extraction.

"I was so excited that I did not get a definite description of him," said Mrs. McManis, who was foremost drawn by the possibility. "I know that he is very young, not more than a few years old, and that he is wearing a dark suit and a white shirt with a dark tie. I do not wish to say anything about it at first, but when I began to think what it might mean to girls of this town if this man were left at large, I retraced the matter to the police."

Mrs. McManis believes that her husband's account is correct. After being taken away by the police, she searched the matter to the police.

Mrs. Allen was in an ornamental square when the "hugger" attempted to embrace her, but succeeded in escaping. Miss Matron ran for a safe, screaming for help when she was attacked. Mrs. Miller was crossing an open lot near her home when she was assaulted by the man. She screamed at his attempted embrace and her screams frightened the man away.

At the arrest of five election officers in Philadelphia last night, the thirty-seventh division of the Twentieth Ward, the Committee of Seventy yesterday declared that this was the preliminary move to wholesale arrests of election officers in both the Vars and McShiels wards for alleged fraud in connection with the last presidential election.

The pressure taken yesterday will be given a hearing before Magistrate Fisher on Friday, and are Gus Seasongood, the judge of election, William Lyons and Edgar A. Sapp, inspectors of election, and George W. Free and William Morgan, the clerks at the polls. These men are charged with conspiracy to deprive a qualified voter of his right to cast a ballot, willful fraud and neglect of duty. Scores of other officers will be arrested in similar cases, the committee announced.

Charles Smith is the voter on whose complaint the committee acted, and the officials of the body stated last night that the evidence was obtained after months of investigation. Smith says that on the day of election he went to the polls in Oak's division, and received his ballot. He declares that when he went into the booth Seasongood forced his way inside and demanded that he give Smith "assistance."

Smith said that he would mark his own ballot, and a struggle started in which Smith was the winner. However, the vote charges that after the ballot was marked Seasongood took it and hid it inside of his coat.

The voter, angered and determined on his rights, he said, demanded that he be given another ballot. A struggle ensued, which was ended by Smith receiving a ballot. He proceeded to the booth and marked it, giving it to Seasongood again. The judge of election, according to the charge, took the ballot and slipped it under the lid of the ballot-box, but not inside the receptacle. Later, Smith says that he saw his original ballot exposed on the counters' table and marked "void." The second ballot, he says, he thinks was destroyed.
