iun,

tast summer Wagner was playing his twentieth major league campaign. He was moving into his forty-third year. Yet, even then, he was above 300 most of the season, and at the finish only seven regulars in the National League were above him. He completed his twentieth year of battle as the horder billing chemistry.

A year ago he collaborated with a Pitts.

FORTY-THREE years ago today, in the reatest Batting Eyes that baseball has ver known blinked out upon the world. They were attached unto the person aristened a triffe later as John Henry Wags with the John Henry supplanted by Honus Honus the Hittle-Sultan of Swat.

-Honus the Hittle-Sultan of Swat. Wagner is forty-three years old today-the only ball player, with the exceptions of Cap Anson and Cy Young, who was a major eaguer this far along the devious highway of life.

Wagner's Reign

A number of words have been spilled around John Henry Wagner before. We would esteem it considerable bliss to have a dollar for every word that has been written about him thuse last twenty-odd years. After buying out Standard Oll, the Steel Corporation and settling the war debt of Europe, we have only a few millions left But there is always room for a few more words where praise of John Henry Wagner involved. Mighty-shouldered, buil-throated, lionten about him these last twenty-odd years

barted, bew-legged, linked to a lumbering grace that covered ground with amazing wiftness, Wagner has long been an

When the check came Hans turned over the entire amount to the basebalt writer, who had been the victim of a severe illness. Money was never any part of his god. He got his living from the game, but he played it still more for the love of it. We know on two occasions where Penn-sylvania voters urged him to run for Congress. On each occasion he refused. The ceratinty of election would not have tempted him. "I would have to quit base-ball," he wrote. That was enough to end ution and an inspiration. He has been thrice blessed-blessed with He has been influe biessed —biessed with a Batting Eye incarnate —blessed with a pair of hands that might have relieved Allas — and blessed again with a love for and a loyally to the game that has never the game that has never ball," he wrote. That was enough to end the debate. been equaled. In his twenty years of major league base

How much further Wagner can go is not to be called in advance. His scalp is gray and his face is wrinkled from the eye-strain mme than the gate receipts.

A Few Records

The big infielder has more than his share frecords. He has played in more many af records. He has played in more games, sorred more runs, made more hits and solen more bases than any other ball haver who ever lived. In addition to this, he holds the game's moord of seventeen successive years at 300 the field, but part of the answer, at least, is this: Last year no shortstop outbatted, and only one, Maranville, had a better fieldor above-the .800 span extending unroken from 1897 to 1914.

ing average. He isn't hanging on through sentiment, but results. * Time has been beckoning him from a long broken from 1897 to 1914. Dan Brouthers batted .300 or better four-ten years in succession; Keeler, thirteen; Anson, twelve; Ed Delehanty, Nap Lajole and Joe Kelly, eleven each. Ty Cobb has also batted above .300 ahe last eleven years, span through an age that has been serving Youth But the answer in his twentleth cam-paign and his forty-second year was this: Batting average, 287; fielding average, 944. So Time has about decided to quit catling him in, probably on the theory that he has grown too deaf to hear. with some distance yet to go-but with seen 300 years ahead before he passes han Henry Wagner's mighty mark. Cobb now holds the major league record of nine successive years of batting leader-ship, and he hopes to move along and add Wagner's record to his credit - but at thirty. even years above .300 is no light task even for a Cobb to face. There have been many thousands of
