Wynne Chats at Length on the Subject of the Art Alliance—The Thursday Music Talks Prove Interesting

During classes, Red Cross classes, preparedness and cooking classes are in the rage at present, and everywhere I hear of one thing or the other being discussed. Another matter which has of great interest to those who wish to do a city beautiful and hope that building of proper proportions and symmetrical outline may add to the general glory of nations, and Philadelphia in particular, is the Art Alliance, which you know has this object much at heart in its plans for erecting a building which shall be a center for the various art associations in the city. And some twenty-three of these clubs and associations have already signified their intention of supporting the building should it materialize. On Tuesday of next week there will be a meeting of the representatives of the twenty-three clubs, who will confer with officials of the Art Alliance as to means and means of raising funds and promoting the interest of various persons of prominence in the city. It was for this purpose, you know, that the long-table luncheons were started at the Bellevue-Stratford and three given for the sake of talking things over. The first was held the last week in January, the second on February 2 and again on February 9. At the last luncheon Mrs. Edward Biddle, who was one of the speakers, presented Mrs. Yorke Stevenson (who is secretary of the alliance and who has done so much to further the plans for the building) to Christopher Columbus, in that she was instrumental in opening a new world of art to the people of this city. At least that is the idea I got, as I could see no other resemblance to the great discoverer in Mrs. Stevenson, though, if memory serves me right, there was some allusion to the appeal to the court of Spain. No matter what the resemblance was or is, the simile was remarkable, you will admit, and served to remain in the minds of the hearers. Among the speakers at the already named luncheons were Mrs. Leopold Stokowski, Samuel Fleisher, Harvey Watt, John Gribbel, Alba Johnson, Frank Purdy, of New York, who is president of the Art Alliance of America; Arthur Judson, Edith Wynne Mathison, Grant Allan, Leslie Miller, Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, Mrs. Edward Biddle, John Trask and Samuel Woodward.

It really was quite some idea having long-table luncheons for some hundred people, among whom were many society women who had been dancing late the evening before and who managed to be ON TIME at these affairs, for you know the long-table lunch has been adopted for the business man, who may listen and eat at the same time and yet not take from his business duties. And it worked, let me tell you, for out of about 200 at 170 were strictly on time, "sipping soup suitably" to the accompaniment of excellent talks on art, and high "awt" at that. In fact, so well did it work there is talk and even conversation on the advantage of renewing the talks after the Lenten season, for the way to man's pocketbook, as well as his heart, is often found to be through his stomach—excuse me, please, but facts "is" facts, and every little helps when one is about to build an Art Alliance building. Mrs. Webster Fox and Mrs. John Oakley attended to all the details for these luncheons.

ONE often hears curious and extraordinary ideas on the symphony expressed between movements of the numbers at the concerts of Mr. Stokowski's band. Of course, there are books to tell one all about the origins of the symphonic form and orchestral technique in general, but in the rush of modern social life one has not much time to spend in the library, with "thousands" and other functions gayly calling. Buds of this season and some of past seasons, now matrons, can give a much more intelligent idea of what symphonic music really means, besides simple enjoyment of lovely sounds, by attending Miss Florence Leonard's music talk this afternoon in Witherspoon Hall. She is to discuss some of the beginnings of the symphony in this fifth lecture recital of the series, and, of course, her text will be illustrated by orchestral excerpts, given by members of the Philadelphia Orchestra under Anton Horner. Here is a short cut to musical knowledge. In fact, all the lectures are that. Several more are to be given on alternate Thursdays. By the way, this would be a seemly Lenten "diversion." Music, you know, was called "Heavenly Maid" by a poet, and even has its patron in St. Cecilia.

DRUG FIENDS TO VIEW FAMOUS 'COKE' PICTURE

George Long Hopes to Teach Lesson With Painting by Kriehoff

The worth of art as an inspiration to nobler living will be tested tomorrow when a dozen or more drug-users are taken to view the painting "Coke," on exhibition at the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts.

Firm in the belief that the painting will aid in his attempted reform of drug-users, George Long, superintendent of the Ina-much Mission, will take the men to the Academy to see the much-discussed picture. The portrait, that of a "dope fiend" showing in his greenish face the ravages of cocaine, was painted by William G. Kriehoff, an artist on the staff of the Ledgers, with studios at 219 Chestnut street. It portrays the victim of the drug in a characteristic mood.

"The forces of the moral that goes with this picture will have a strengthening influence on any man or woman addicted to 'coke,'" said Mr. Long. "I am sure of it."

He will meet the men at the mission, 1011 Locust street, tomorrow afternoon at 2:30 o'clock for the trip to the Academy. Any drug-user who wishes to join the party will be welcomed by Mr. Long, who is anxious to take as many persons as possible to view the picture.

He will line up his "class" in front of the painting. After they have decided for themselves whether or not the artist has painted the face true to life, he will tell them that the portrait is a reflection of what they are destined to become unless they gain the upper hand over the drug. In a short talk on the evil effects and the suffering wrought by drug-using he will tell them of his own reformation from the drug habit.

THREE ESCAPE FLAMES LAID TO FAULTY WIRING

Woman Separated From Husband Almost Dies in Smoke-Filled Home

Three persons narrowly escaped from flames that swept the shoe-repairing store and dwelling of Morris Bewetsky, 1410 South Fifty-second street, early today. Bewetsky and his wife, half-choked by smoke and scantily clad, crawled through a severe coughing spell caused by the smoke and alighted in an adjoining room. Mrs. Bewetsky, a relative, who resides with Bewetsky, tried to descend the stairway, but was beaten back by the flames and forced to escape through a rear window.

The fire, which is believed to have been caused by defective wiring, was discovered by Mrs. Bewetsky, who was awakened by a severe coughing spell caused by the smoke. She called her husband and Baratz. All three tried to reach the stairway, but were blinded by the smoke. Mrs. Bewetsky became separated from the group, and it was not until she was partly overcome by smoke that she was found by her husband.

The flames spread rapidly and made their way into the Union Meat Market, 1408 South Fifty-second street. Mrs. Margaret James and her daughter, Anna, were in their home above the store, were forced to make their way through dense smoke and reached the street in scant attire.

The fire destroyed the second floor and part of the third story, causing damage estimated at $2000. The flames caused a loss of about $100 in the meat market.

HUSBAND, LONG "DEAD," HALTS WIFE'S WEDDING

Charleroi's Enoch Arden Spoils Role by Refusing to Disappear Again

CHARLEROI, Pa., March 1.—Mourned as long dead, Enoch Packer appeared at the church and prevented a wedding which was to have been celebrated between a bride and her groom.

The automobile carrying the bride couple and their attendants was stopped outside and warning conveyed to the principals. Later Packer and his wife were taken to his home, but the reconciliation brought little joy to Packer.

Nine years ago Packer, while living with his wife in apparent happiness, suddenly disappeared. Three years after he had gone away word reached this city that he had been killed in an accident. The report of Packer's death was later verified by a friend who reported that he had seen his body interred in a western city.

Unlike Enoch Arden, Packer refuses to go away and leave the pair. He explains his absence by saying he was visiting his wife in Europe. He also says that he wrote his wife several letters which she never answered.

BIBLE PATRIOT'S BOOK, SAYS DEAN IN SERMON

The Bible as the great text book of patriotism and of political problems was extolled in the noonday Lenten sermon at the Garrick Theatre by the Very Rev. Dr. H. P. Almon Abbott. He said in part:

"The solution of every modern political problem lies right in the Bible. Patriotism is preached in the scriptures. The idea of Patrick Henry, 'Give me liberty or give me death,' was not original with him. The doctrines of human liberty were preached repeatedly in both the Old and New Testaments."

"What we need is not so many good principles as good men. Individual character must underlie the success of any nation. There are many traitors in time of peace and these are more dangerous to the welfare of a country than the open traitors of war. The traitors of war are shot; so the traitors of peace should be shot—shot by public indignation."

FINANCIAL STANDARDS ASSAILED BY PREACHER

"Judas's Pence Value" was the subject of the sermon of the Rev. Paul L. Young, of St. Paul's Church, at the noonday Lenten service in Old St. John's Church today. He said:

"Judas only knew of pence value. This is a modern fault. Thousands of men and women today estimate all the finer attributes of life in dollars and cents. Friendship, sympathy, faithfulness, sacrifice and love itself are listed in the Judas price catalogue now."

"The salvation of a soul is not a pence business. A money-seeking pastor or evangelist is not a soul healer, but a pence collector. The church of today which values its success on its financial report is missing the purpose to which it was dedicated."

BACK-YARD GARDENING WAY TO REDUCE HIGH COST OF LIVING

Swiss Chard Both "Greens" and Asparagus. Radishes and Lettuce Easy to Grow—Supervisor of School Gardens Gives Practical Hints

Listen, housewives and avoiders of the high prices. The high cost of growing isn't one inch higher than it was ten years ago! The affluent little radish is still a modest affair, but his kindred, the recently arrived Swiss chard, and a head of lettuce doesn't ask one whit more stretching space than it did back in grandma's garden. The affluence makes no strike demands on Father Sun and, the recently arrived onion manages to get along on the usual supply of rain.

MISS CARO MILLER
Supervisor of school gardens for the Board of Education, who urges backyard gardening to reduce the cost of living.

For a time and strange as these erstwhile friends seem when viewed on the heights of a market stand, approached in the comfortable sunshine of a plain "two by four" backyard, they can be wooed back to former status. An "there is nothing mystical about gardening," says Miss Caro Miller, supervisor of school gardens for the Board of Education. "Some persons are surprised when things do come up, whereas they should be surprised when they don't."

Which all means that any woman with a few feet of back yard at her disposal and the ability to follow a few simple rules can keep down the cost of her table to a very great degree by establishing a home garden.

Miss Miller gives a few simple and untechnical suggestions for the housewife who has had no experience in the art of growing. She prefaces her informal rules by saying: "No one need be afraid of seed if the ground in which it is to be planted is well prepared." Preparation consists in fertilizing the soil with well-rotted manure street sweepings or with any of the prepared fertilizers which are to be had at the seed stores with full directions for their use.

If street sweepings are to be used, a generous layer should be spread over the top of the ground and then turned under by deep and raking and hoeing thorough.

Miss Miller draws attention to the fact that what she here treats of in outline is fully covered in directions furnished by the seedsmen from whom seeds are purchased. She warns against two common errors of amateur gardeners, planting too deep and overcrowding.

"Flant Swiss chard," is the first sowing advice. "A ten-foot row of this," explains Miss Miller, "will supply a small-sized family with greens for an entire season. The rib leaf variety can be used as asparagus. The particular merit of the plant is its plentiful bearing and long season growth. The leaves must be picked close to the ground in directions furnished by the seedsmen from whom seeds are purchased. The Swiss chard may be planted as soon as the ground is workable."

The little bush beans, the ones that do not require poles, are very popular. Many gardeners have had great success with the kidney, wax and the stringless green pod. Beans should not be planted until the fruit begins to show.

"Lettuce and radishes are rapid growers, particularly radishes. Twenty-one days from seed to table is a record established by one of these little plants. They may be planted as soon as the ground is workable. They must be thinned out as soon as there is any sign of crowding."

"Golden bantam corn adds much value to a garden if there is room for it. The stalks are lower than most varieties, and therefore not so apt to keep the sun away from the smaller plants and close planting is possible. If tomatoes are desired in the home garden, it is better to buy the stocky plants from a seedsmen than to raise the seed at home. A row of these along an open fence utilizes valuable space."

The golden rule for amateur gardeners, according to Miss Miller, is a thoroughly prepared soil, plenty of sun, care about overcrowding, constant hoeing to keep down weeds and to insure a mulch of earth at all times, not much watering in the spring and early summer when the ground is moist and an occasional after-sundown soaking in the dry season, followed by hoeing early the next day.

TREAT ALIENS WELL, AMERICANS URGED

Show Them Neither Suspicion Nor Aggressiveness, National Defense Council Advises

WASHINGTON, March 1.—The Council of National Defense has issued an appeal to the people of the United States to show every consideration in the present international situation to aliens in this country.

"The presence here at this time of perhaps 8,000,000 aliens," says the statement, "is deeply and soberly to be weighed not only in our interests, but in their own. For so long a space as they are lawful dwellers within this country they are entitled to the generous consideration of the people and Government of the United States."

"We urge on all Americans to meet these millions of foreign-born with unchanging manner and with unprejudiced mind."

P. E. Pensions Begin Today
NEW YORK, March 1.—The pension fund of the Protestant Episcopal Church, providing for the pensioning of aged clergymen, their widows and orphans, will become effective today. Bishop Lawrence, of Massachusetts, announced here last night. "It is possible to announce at this time," said Bishop Lawrence, "that at least $6,500,000 has been subscribed."

500,000 RED MEN OFFER SERVICES TO NATION

Head of Fraternal Order Wires Plan of Assistance to President Wilson

GLOUCESTER CITY, N. J., March 1.—The services of more than 500,000 members of the Improved Order of Red Men of the United States have been offered to President Wilson in case there is war with Germany. Letters to this effect have been received by the officers of the Great Council of New Jersey, all of whom approve of the action of T. H. Jeffries, the Great Inchoonee of the Great Council of the United States, who sent the following to President Wilson:

"As the Great Inchoonee of the Improved Order of Red Men, the fourth largest fraternal beneficiary organization of the world, I offer to you, as President of the United States, the services of our 500,000 loyal members in any crisis that may arise at the present time. Our order had its real origin at the time of the Boston tea party. It was born in patriotism and baptized by the blood of Revolutionary heroes. We are with you to a finish, and we trust that during the trying times through which you are passing you may have the guiding direction of the Great Spirit."

KINDLER-HAMMANN DUO IN GRAY RECITAL

Fine Artists Not Heard at Their Best in Witherspoon Hall

To write charitably, sensibly and frankly of the Messrs. Kindler and Hammann's recital in Witherspoon Hall last night is neither easy nor agreeable. Each a trained artist of proved interpretative perception; each records mood sensitively and delicately; each is personable and popular. But no one—not even the greatest critic or pianist, is proof against such a combination as an imperfect program, atrocious weather and the mood that mechanizes instead of making lyrical. In spite of the gloomy critical prelude it may be added that the talents of the artists were not wholly obscured. Only they did not quite touch the pinnacle of their last joint appearance.

A very large and acclamatory audience followed the Messrs. Kindler and Hammann through their brilliant if not especially sensitive performance of a Beethoven sonata, itself undistinguished by beauty of sentiment or phrasing. The touch on the violoncello often bespoke a young master's hands at the strings, and the broad sweeping movements in the high notes were accomplished with the grace of a virtuoso. The other dual production was a Saint-Saens sonata.

Individual playing found expression in Schumann's "Papillons" and the glittering Chopin waltzes, opus 39, by the pianist, and the Liszt-Popper rhapsody and a novel ety by Godowsky, "Larghetto Lamentoso," by the cellist. The last-named, while perfectly superficial and trivial, proved to have all the charm of a popular success. Sentimentally presented, as Mr. Kindler did it, it was rapturously received. Of course, the technique of skilled performers, adept and agile, must always blind the unknowing to their own emotional grasp and spiritual insight. Mr. Kindler can usually "make a nightingale out of an ox," in the classic phrase. Mr. Hammann can usually lift himself quite out of the rut of mere accompaniment. To repeat that they did not last night is merely to repeat that they are human and music the most elusive and intangible, as well as the greatest of the arts.

TEA FOR YOUNG ARTISTS
Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney Entertains Prize Winners at Decorators' Exhibit

NEW YORK, March 1.—In honor of the thirteen competitors who have won prizes at the Decorators' Exhibit behind held by friends of the young artists in the galleries of the Harry Payne Whitney gallery, a tea in her studio there.

The first prize of $200, offered by Otto H. Kahn, has been awarded to Burton Keeler, who received his art education in Philadelphia. The second prize, of $150, offered by C. G. Charles, was awarded to Alice Riddle, of Philadelphia, and the third prize, of $100, to Hugo Geiler, of New York.

Mrs. Whitney offered ten prizes of $25 each, and these were won by James Chapin, of Philadelphia; John J. Baughman, of New York; J. P. Slusser, J. Tingler and Marguerite Zorach, all of New York; Charles Louis Borie, Jr., and Georgiana Brown Harbeson, of Philadelphia, and Jenny Luce Bailey, of Pittsburgh.

The golden rule for amateur gardeners, according to Miss Miller, is a thoroughly prepared soil, plenty of sun, care about overcrowding, constant hoeing to keep down weeds and to insure a mulch of earth at all times, not much watering in the spring and early summer when the ground is moist and an occasional after-sundown soaking in the dry season, followed by hoeing early the next day.

SHIP TEAMS FORMED
Battleship Minnesota Crew Leads All Others in Number of Recruits Gained—List of Workers

The United States navy needs 25,000 men. This information was given out officially at the Philadelphia Navy Yard today, when it became known that each of the seven battleships now in the yard has been enlisted by the Government officially to bring in recruits for the navy.

The crew of the Minnesota is the champion recruit so far, for it has obtained the largest number of recruits. The crews of the 100 men who have been enlisted during the last two weeks by crews of battleships now in Philadelphia, New York and Boston. The seven in Philadelphia are the Minnesota, the Wisconsin, the Missouri, the Ohio, the Chicago, the Alabama and the Kansas. There are three in New York and six in Boston.

The movement of getting recruits from the territory adjoining the cities where the United States navy men are stationed is sanctioned by the Government. The captain of each of the forty or fifty battleships in American waters has been ordered to appoint a committee of workers, called a recruiting party.

For each recruit signed by a member of the party the Government gives the man who obtains the signer three days' leave of absence.

The Minnesota, prize team, sends out hundreds of letters daily, and the men go through New Jersey and Pennsylvania for possible recruits. They also use the telephone to get in communication with candidates.

There are about 400 c-ft in the United States navy, less than a score of which are battleships of the first line. The navy needs men for the ships already built and for those in construction, according to navy yard officials.

The men of the battleships in the Philadelphia Navy Yard who are on the recruiting teams are:

MINNESOTA—Albert Ray, Montgomery, Ala.; R. E. Crusler, Allentown, Pa.; W. F. Gault, New York; Fred Stauffer, Boston, and Kenneth Carter Smith, Chicago.

WISCONSIN—Jay L. Corley, Morgantown, N. C.; Hunter J. Norton, Hannesville, Ala.; Oscar T. Schubert, Senneville, Mich.; Harry B. Harrington, Frederic, Del., and William H. Slusher, Springfield, Mo.

OHIO—W. W. Toles, Philadelphia; D. C. Lawyer, Philadelphia; A. J. Ford, Oil City; R. J. Abel, Tacora, Pa.; E. A. Ballou, Columbus, O.; C. J. Wash, Philadelphia; Herbert Daicing, Detroit, and Frank Graham, Philadelphia.

MISSOURI—Lawrence Townsend, Jr., New York; F. T. Mayes, Cleveland; C. L. Du Pinlo, New Orleans, and F. K. Knudsen, Philadelphia.

CHICAGO—O. N. Byrd, Norfolk, Va.; James Brooks, Philadelphia, and William Stanford, Washington, D. C.
