

CUPID AGAIN ENSNARES TWO SEPTUAGENARIANS

Two Divorcees Also Get Permits to Marry—Decree for One Two Weeks Ago

Two septuagenarians and two divorcees, one receiving her decree two weeks ago, today obtained licenses to marry. Harry Eckert, a seventy-four-year-old farmer of Merion township, and Harry D. Snyder, seventy years old, of Cramer Hill, N. J. were the aged prospective bridegrooms. The former will marry Mary M. E. Klepper, fifty-seven years old, 3712 Frankford avenue. Snyder, who is a boatman, will wed Mrs. Elizabeth Brown, a widow, forty-five years old, 2164 East York street. This is his third marriage venture, his first wife having died about forty years ago and his second wife a quarter of a century ago. Mrs. Brown's husband died in New York about eleven years ago. Mrs. Eva Reatcliffe, 1418 West Dauphin street, who obtained a divorce from her husband, Henry S. J. Reatcliffe, February 11, obtained a license today to marry John Nolan, a carpenter, of Newtown, Pa. The divorce was granted on grounds of cruel and barbarous treatment. Another divorcee, Mrs. Laura Pressman, 5543 Chancellor street, obtained a license to marry Howard R. Brewer, twenty-four years old, a brakeman, of the same address. Mrs. Pressman, who is twenty-nine years old, obtained a divorce from her husband, John Pressman, June 29, 1916, on grounds of desertion. Other marriage licenses issued today were:

GIRL RESENTS BOSSING; CALLS ENGAGEMENT OFF

Model Denies Right of Fiance to Dictate Her Choice of Clothes

Although golden sunshine spreads an air of optimism and early birds have chanted the coming of spring when love dawns in the breast of youth—a romance has already been shattered in our midst.
"No wedding bells shall ring" for Ethel Taylor and George Gates. Here it is in one reel!
Miss Taylor is a model of radiant beauty and determined demeanor. While she believes in romance, she will not allow it to interfere with business.
There is an air of finality about everything she does. She cannot be coaxed into saying "yes" when she means "no." Her eyes never belie her thoughts, so she explained today, and she never smiles to hide a frown.
While Mr. Gates likes a girl to lead a modern life, he doesn't believe the girl he loves should be a model. And he told her so. His views on the subject came to the surface when Miss Taylor informed him she had been selected to appear in the fashion show held by the Walnut Street Business Association, which will begin a three days' engagement at the Bellevue-Stratford on Wednesday.
Mr. Gates was indignant, it is said. His indignation, according to Miss Taylor, was followed by an outburst of wrath when he learned that the girl of his heart was to appear in a hunting costume with tight-fitting breeches, etc., etc., and also in a fishing suit in which breeches would again figure conspicuously.
"It's I or the fashion show," Mr. Gates is reported to have said.
"Then it's the show," asserted Miss Taylor. And with this reply she slipped the white brilliant set in platinum from her finger and returned it to the man who had told her that she was the ideal of his dreams. Like "Tempting Tillie" or romance land, Miss Taylor said she would not have her fiance modeled even by the man she loved.
Any one who ever saw Miss Taylor would know that there was no significance in the costumes she will wear. She would never have to hunt or fish for a man.
"The best people in society wear the costumes in public which I will wear at the show," she said; "there's nothing wrong about it. It's just as well to know Mr. Gates' views on such things in advance."
Then with a sigh she added: "Who knows but what it's happened for the best?"

EDITOR'S WIDOW SEES IRISH REVOLT COMING

Heart of People Not in War, Says Mrs. Skeffington. Scores British Rule

Ireland's peculiar position in the war and the internal dissensions among those who are fighting in the ranks of the Allies were touched upon today by Mrs. Hanna Skeffington, widow of the editor of the Irish Citizen, who was killed during the recent Sinn-Fein uprising in Dublin.
Mrs. Skeffington is a motherly looking woman of pleasing personality. Sorrow has slightly tinged her hair with gray. There was nothing savoring of vindictiveness in her tones when she spoke briefly of conditions in Ireland and events surrounding the tragic death of her husband. She is staying at the Bellevue-Stratford with her son Owen, a bright little chap of twelve. The boy is not quite so calm as his mother, and if his present view of events is any criterion, some one is going to pay for the killing of his daddy.
"Americans should not think that the Irish nation is in this war wholeheartedly," said Mrs. Skeffington. "Many Irishmen joined the British army at the outset of hostilities on account of the Belgian atrocities. But when England wanted to use these same soldiers to shoot down Irish citizens they rebelled."
"The sentiment against England is growing rapidly in Ireland. There is great resentment on account of England's treatment of the Irish soldiers. England is sending them to India and everywhere else to keep them out of Ireland."
Regarding her husband's death, Mrs. Skeffington said:
" My husband was shot in the back by Captain J. C. Bowen-Cothurst. His death was decided upon by others higher up and I don't think he was ever carrying out orders. Mr. Skeffington was arrested, taken to jail and told to walk toward a wall. A volley of shots was fired at him. The first volley did not kill him and another was fired. There was no trial, no charges, no formality. He was murdered without a chance."
"Major Sir Francis Vane, who made a protest over the killing of my husband, was dismissed from the army. Cothurst was placed on trial and a verdict of insanity was rendered. He was placed in a private sanitarium, but it is generally known that he is not insane. I have no antagonistic feelings toward him personally, for I know he was simply selected to carry out orders."

BRITISH STEAMSHIP HAS NARROW U-BOAT ESCAPE

Torpedo Misses Harrison Liner in the Mersey, Captain Reports on Arrival

GALVESTON, Tex., March 12.—The Harrison liner Professor, flying the British flag, narrowly escaped being torpedoed in the Mersey, according to Captain Sam Bass. The Professor arrived in port today. A torpedo passed within three feet of the ship's stern. No submarine was sighted.
" On the night of February 2," said Captain Bass, "when we were a few hours out, we began receiving S. O. S. calls. We saw a big oil tank liner torpedoed off our port bow. The entire steamship caught fire and in the glare we saw for miles around ships sinking. A torpedo sped within three feet of us."
The steamship Artist, of the Harrison line, already has been reported torpedoed in January. Captain Mills and all of the officers and the crew but nine were frozen to death in open boats.

IN 1844
a Philadelphian started to make tools and supplies for dentists. His name was S. S. White.
About this time Dr. Thomas W. Evans, another Philadelphian, started a dental practice in Paris. His technique made American dentistry famous and his practice included no less a personage than Napoleon III.
Just as Dr. Evans was part and parcel of the rise of the profession to its present eminence, so "S. S. White" has constantly meant "Standard" in dental equipment since 1844.
