Huntingdon Valley Country Club Members Meet Tonight to Hear John McFadden, Jr.—"Oh! Mary, Be Careful," Quotes Nancy

TONIGHT Jack McFadden is going to speak at the Huntingdon Valley Country Club about his experiences in the ambulance corps in the recent American Expedition.

On Thursday night he told one story of going along the road just a few hundred feet back of the trenches for a wounded soldier.

Mr. McFadden's talk about Verdun and, by the way, it's some relief to hear him pronounce it with the proper accent.

THE AFTERGLOW

A Sequel to "Beyond the Great Oblivion" By GEORGE ALLAN ENGLAND

CHAPTER XXIX—(Continued) I HAD to stop and rig up some shields for them, and smear their hands and faces with mud to keep off the sun.

CHAPTER XXX Into the Fire-Swept Wilderness LESS than three weeks after the extermination of the Horde, Stern had already completed important measures looking toward the rehabilitation of the colony.

The damage had been largely repaired. Now only some half-dozen convalescent cases remained on the sick list. What the colony had lost in numbers it had gained in solidarity and a truer loyalty than ever before felt there.

The fishing, hunting and domestication of wild animals all were resumed, and again the sound of hammers and anvils clanked through the caves.

Under Stern's direction, half a dozen men crossed the bow in boats, descended the north bank of the river, and got hold of the cut bridge cables.

Stern shot a thin line over to them by means of a bow and arrow. With this they pulled the stouter cord across, and finally a strong cable. All hands together soon brought the bridge once more up the cliff, where it was lashed to its old moorings.

Barring a few broken floor-planks, easily replaced, only slight damage had been done. One day's labor sufficed to put it in repair again.

The parapet was rebuilt and a wall constructed across the end of the broken terrace. Work was begun on new cave dwellings, which were to be scattered on the strata and so invite another disaster.

Stern, very wise by now in gauging the barbarian mentality, undertook no direct punishment of such as had been led away by the Horde. But he gathered all the folk together in the palisade, and there—close to the nutmeg-elegant object-lesson of the little cemetery—he made them a charge, a talk in their own speech.

"My people," he said, "I stand and strong before them all, 'listen now, for this thing ye must know!'"

"The evil of your hearts, thinking to prevail against me and the Law, hath brought ye against me and death. Ye have rebelled against the Law, and behold many are now dead—innocent as well as guilty. The land-slides smote ye, and enemies came—enemies far more terrible than the dread Lanskarna ye fought in the Abyss! But a little more and ye had all died with battle and slaughter. Only my hand alone saved ye—all who still live to breathe this upper air."

"Men! Ye beheld my doing with the earthquake and the Horde! Ye beheld, too, how I fought to prevent the evil man from rebel and traitor. Him ye saw hurled, bleeding from the parapet. That was my answer to his insolence! And if not he, he that ever stood against me?"

He paused, and swept them with his glance, letting the lesson sink deep home. Before him their eyes were lowered; their heads bowed; and through them all ran a murmur of awe and supplication.

"My folk! Rightly might I be angered with you, and require sacrifice and still more blood; but I am merciful. I shall not punish! I shall only teach and guide and help. For my heart is your heart, and ye are precious in my eyes."

"But, hark ye now, and think, and judge for yourselves! If any ever speak again of rebellion, of treason, and of the breaking of the Law, on his head shall be the blood of all. For surely now shall come again on us. In your own behalf I warn you, and ye shall be the judges. Now answer me, O my folk! What shall be done unto any who rebels?"

"He shall die!" boomed the voice of Zangamon. The loyal fighter, now lean and gaunt, and with a beard that still powerful, raised his corded hand on high. "Of a truth, that man shall die!"

"What death?" cried Stern. "Even the death of Hyemba! Let him be cast from the parapet to death in the white rushing river far below!"

All echoed the cry: "Death to all traitors, from the rock!"
