IF ADAM AND EVE HAD DONE IT FOR THE MOVIES

PELLUCIDAR

Sequel to "At the Earth's Core." BY EDGAR RICE BURROUGHS Author of the "Tarzan" Stories

THE STORY THIS FAR When I first stepped through the ground of Pellucidar in the start of my journey to the earth's center, I was carrying with me a map of the land of the earth's core.

CHAPTER VI-Continued TO THIS END twenty warriors were dispatched in pairs to ten of the leading kingdoms, with instructions to make every effort to discover the whereabouts of Hooja and Dian while prosecuting their missions.

It was after my second sleep, subsequent to the departure of the warriors, as I recall that I at last went to Ghak with the admission that I could no longer support the intolerable longing to be personally upon the trail of my lost love.

"Who are you?" asked Ghak. "And where are you?" I asked, "does Gork, your father, desire to join his kingdom to the empire?"

"We of Thuria have heard of a great chieftain who has bound together many tribes, and if there be truth in these stories, and if so to offer the service of Thuria to learn how we have heard called superior to any other kingdom."

"I am Kolk, son of Gork, who is chief of the Thurians," replied the stranger. "From Thuria I have come in search of the land of Amoz, which dwells Dacor, the Strong One, who stole my sister, Candia, the Gracious One, to be his mate."

"I am Kolk, son of Gork, who is chief of the Thurians," replied the stranger. "From Thuria I have come in search of the land of Amoz, which dwells Dacor, the Strong One, who stole my sister, Candia, the Gracious One, to be his mate."

one of our own warriors who had pretended to sympathize with this band and had then escaped at the first opportunity. "Who could this man be?" I asked Ghak.

"But first must you lure him to the mainland, for who among you knows how to construct the strange things that carry Hooja and his band back and forth across the water?"

"I could not persuade him to do more than direct me upon the way. I showed him my map, which he studied a great while, a country extending from Anoric upon the east to Sari upon the west, and from the river south of the Mountains of the Clouds north to Amoz.

"I advanced the theory that the Solar Ax, or Great Sea, which Kolk mentioned as stretching eastward from Thuria, might indeed be the same mighty ocean as that which, swinging across the southern end of a continent northward along the shore opposite Phutra, mingling with the huge gulf upon which lay Sari, Amoz and Greenwick."

"I told Ghak what I had written, and suggested that as soon as he could he make new treaties with the various kingdoms of the empire, collect an army, and march toward Thuria—this, of course, against the possibility of my detention through some cause or other."

"Kolk gave me a sign to his father—a lid, a bead of burden, and a crudely stretched upon a bit of bone, and beneath the lid a man and a flower; all very rudely done, perhaps, but none the less effective, as I well knew from my long years among the primitive men of Pellucidar."

"Kolk gave me explicit directions, though with my map I do not believe that I could have gone wrong. As a matter of fact I did not need the map at all, since the principal landmark of the first half of my journey, a gigantic mountain peak, was plainly visible from Sari, though a good hundred miles away."

Two hundred and forty miles of wild mountain and primeval jungle, or untracked plain, of nameless rivers, of deadly swamps and savage forests lay ahead of me, yet never had I been more eager for an adventure than now, for never had more depended upon haste and success.

"I do not know how long a time that journey required, and only half did I appreciate the varied wonders that each new march unfolded before me, for my mind and heart were filled with but a single image—that of a perfect girl whose great dark eyes looked bravely forth from a frame of raven hair."

It was not until I had passed the high peak and found the river that my eyes first discovered the presence of the satellite which hangs low over the surface of Pellucidar, casting its perpetual shadow always upon the same spot—the area that is known here as the Land of Awful Shadow, in which dwells the tribe of Thuria.

From the distance and the elevation of the highlands where I stood the Pellucidar noonday moon showed half in sunshine and half in shadow, while directly below the ground almost to touch it; but later I was to learn that it floats a mile above the surface—which seems indeed quite close for a moon.

Above me hung another world, I could see its mountains and valleys, oceans, lakes and rivers; its broad, grassy plains and dense forests. But too great was the distance and too deep the shadow of its under side for me to distinguish any movement as of animal life.

Instantly a great curiosity was awakened within me. The questions which the sight of this planet, so tantalizingly close, raised in my mind were numerous and unanswerable.

Here I saw a chance to give time to Pellucidar, using this mighty clock, revolving perpetually in the heavens, to record the passage of the hours for the earth below. Here some place located an observatory from which might be flashed by wireless to every corner of the empire the correct time once each day.
