Anti-Administration Forces Charge President General Discriminates

RAP MAGAZINE MANAGERS

One Candidate for Chieftainship Called of Pacifist Tendencies

WASHINGTON, April 17.

War with Germany faded slightly into the background at the congress of the Daughters of the American Revolution today. Warm rays of sunlight filtering into the convention hall, through overhanging flags of the nations, and a balmy spring breeze fresh from the Potomac, all brought the spirit of spring—and peace early in the day—then came the business of the congress and battle.

Anti-administration forces gathered in phalanxes today to make their first drive for control when reports and recommendations of the national officers were offered. Delegates from the Middle West, full of the spirit of unrest, prepared to wage vigorous warfare against the retiring president general, Mrs. William Cumming Storey, and the woman she has chosen to succeed her—Mrs. J. Hamilton Lewis, of Illinois.

There were no wihsperings of intrigue, but bald, open charges of discrimination against Mrs. Storey by the supporters of Mrs. George Thacher Guernsey, anti-administration candidate for president general. Mrs. Guernsey's cohorts allege that Mrs. Storey purposely failed to invite their candidate to take her place in the receiving line at the president general's reception last night.

"She's from the greatest pacifist State in the union—Kansas," is the defi that the Administration forces are throwing at Mrs. Guernsey. Waving the American flag for what seems to be dangerously akin to a political reason, the anti-Guernsey workers say that the western candidate has been mixed with the western peace party and that it is only recently that she has been a strong war supporter.

The American Revolution Magazine was the first line of defense that the anti-Administration crowd assailed today. They claim mismanagement of the magazine, which is solely in the power of the administration. "We are from Missouri and have to be shown," said one delegate.

Meanwhile, the administration is quietly smiling and promises to "show them" when the proper time comes to make a report upon the financial condition of the periodical.

DOCTOR LEIDY DENIES "HATRED" OF GERMANS

Is Pleased Also at Withdrawal of Objections to Reading Wilson's Address in the Schools

Dr. Joseph Leidy today expressed satisfaction that Simon Gratz, vice president of the Board of Education, had withdrawn his objection to the President's message being read in the public schools.

"I am thoroughly satisfied," said Doctor Leidy, "and as far as I am concerned, the incident is now closed. The EVENING LEDGER has performed a valuable and patriotic service in giving this matter publicity. I know that as the result of the article in yesterday's EVENING LEDGER hundreds of school teachers and school children throughout the city have taken a lively interest in this matter. The publicity given Mr. Gratz's objection to the reading of the message has caused thousands of persons to obtain copies of Mr. Wilson's wonderful document, and they have read it with an attention they would not have otherwise given it.

"Mr. Gratz yesterday spoke of his ancestors to show that he was an American citizen to the bone. It was not necessary for him to display his genealogical tree to establish his patriotism. No one has had any doubt of Mr. Gratz's personal patriotism, but we do know that he frequently makes the mistake of allowing mawkish sentimentality to creep into his actions.

"In taking up the discussion in yesterday's EVENING LEDGER, Mr. Gratz, as usual, dodged the issue. What we objected to was that by the action of the Board of Education the President's message was virtually pigeonholed or laid on the table.

"Mr. Gratz accuses me of having my patriotism on parade, which is unjust. Those who know me, and know of my activities in the matter of preparedness, could not charge me with being ostentatious in my patriotism. I have always tried to serve my country with conservatism and without fanfare.

"It might be gathered that Mr. Gratz sought to cast the odium of hating Germans on me. I have never hated the German people. I believe, as do most thoughtful people, that the Germans are a very superior people, and that they have a culture which is real. In my office here are pictures of two noted German scientists, and a picture of the University of Berlin. If I hated Germans and Germany I would not have these things on my premises. It was unfair of Mr. Gratz to place the odium of an attack on German people on me.

"I am a product of the Philadelphia public schools, and naturally I felt the matter keenly when a movement was started in the Board of Education against the reading of the President's message, which is one of the greatest human documents of all time. I am glad that Mr. Gratz has changed his attitude."

When seen this afternoon in his office in the Board of Revision of Taxes, Mr. Gratz said: "There are some people who would like to drive every one of the German teachers out of our public schools into the street. They have hate in their hearts and their reason has been unbalanced by that hate. President Wilson has cautioned us against such hatred, and I intend to follow out his program of fairness and decency. Why, I know of a woman who discharged her dressmaker this week just because that woman was a German. And, mind you, this German woman had been in America for many years and was an honest, law-abiding woman, with no thought of being disloyal to the land of her adoption. We Americans must not allow the hatred of nationalities to grip us in this manner. It is unchristian."

SUNDAY LEDGER TO GIVE PEN PICTURE OF NIVELLE

French Army Chief, Now in Limelight of Victory, Subject of Intimate Sketch

An intimate sketch of General Robert Nivelle, commander-in-chief of the French armies on the western front and the man who, with Field Marshal Douglas Haig, is throwing back the German forces, will appear in the magazine section of Sunday's PUBLIC LEDGER.

The magnetism of the leader is described by Charles Johnston, and the reason why he is beloved by every man under his command is explained in the article. "He is a brave, fearless man," says the writer, "indifferent to danger when bullets are whistling about him."

The reason, also, why General Nivelle endeared himself to every soldier in the trenches and to the subjects of the Allies by his assault and overwhelming defeat of the Teutons at Verdun is also given attention in the article, which is a character sketch of "the big chief behind the big guns" that are thundering along the entire western front.

POOR GIRL! SHE MUST KILL ONLY THREE MEN, BUT MOST ANYTHING MAY HAPPEN THESE DAYS

'Tis No Easy Job, This of Whipping Into Shape a Rookie Squad, but Mrs. William Merriman Price Would Forestall Any Mishap to Presentation of Masque of American Drama

The Girl's face would have melted the proverbial cold heart of an ice baron. It was reminiscent of a bleak night in a deserted graveyard, with tombstones rising like a field of pale spears amid barren pines and the plaintive who-o-o of the owl sending shivers creeping along the spine. It was—

"You've just killed two men and are about to kill another."

It was a harsh task, that of a triple slaying, but the girl went right through it just like some contemporary Lucretia Borgia on the trail of another Italian nobleman for a victim.

It was incredible that a girl so young and so apparently ingenuous should be so hard-hearted and scheming, but one never can tell in days like these, when the milkmen garner in the profits on "war brides," while those of the upper strata work desperately to save their millions. That brigand in the corner is a brow-beaten, domesticated husband, and the woman standing near him (that inoffensive creature) is the terrible person who put cyanide in the Crown Prince's bronchial lozenges.

But to return to the girl—her eyes suddenly flashed with hate and she was just about to insert the dagger north-nor'west between the right auricle and the aorta when—

"That's enough for tonight. Class dismissed." And the slayers and all the rest of the group file out, while Mrs. William Merriman Price prepares to direct the next group of coeds and men of the University of Pennsylvania who are to take part in the Masque of American Drama.

"Tis no easy job, this of drilling the "rookie" squad in shape for the masque. To the pantomimes will fall a great deal of the burden of telling with splendid color display and movements of ease the story of the progress of the drama in this country by means of pantomime flashes from five plays, "The Prince of Parthia," "The Gladiator," "Francesca da Rimini," "Rip Van Winkle" and "The Scarecrow." And on the willing shoulders of Mrs. Price has devolved the task of whipping 'em (both coeds and boys) into a unified mass.

There are ten girls and three times that many men in the more important parts of the pantomime casts, while more will be needed later for the minor positions. The task of drilling the students has been under way for some time and the easier points assimilated, but when it comes to hurdling difficult parts successfully, well, it's not quite so easy.

Now, when Edwin Forrest played the part of Spartacus in "The Gladiator" he referenced the part because of the opportunities for showing his splendid physique. But can a man be a gladiator if he's less than six feet and measures at least twenty inches around the—er—calf? 'Tis a moot question and one that's unsettled.

And then there's the man who was told he looked just like—yes, exactly like—Joe Jefferson himself when Joe played the part of Rip in "Rip Van Winkle." Then again the girl giggles in the love scene. Well, they don't know because they have at last heeded Mrs. Price's strict maxims that those who play in pantomime are but chattels of the stage.

They're rounding into shape, though, and for that reason it is no secret to tell what is gone by or is going. Instead of letting the mishaps occur on the big stage in the Botanical Gardens next month, Mrs. Price is getting rid of them now, so that when Wassili Leps lifts his baton and the speaking parts subside momentarily, the most graceful co-eds and males at the University of Pennsylvania will come trooping out of the wings with a grace and ease that will make Pavlowa eat caviar with a knife, so jealous will she be.

GUARDSMAN STRUCK BY TRAIN

WILMINGTON, Del., April 17.—While John K. Taylor, of Baltimore, Md., a member of the Fourth Maryland Infantry, was guarding the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad bridge over Gumpowder River at 5 o'clock this morning he was struck by an express train and badly injured. Nothing was known of the accident until the train reached the next station, when the soldier's gun was found in the cowcatcher of the engine. A special train was started out to search for the man and found him at the bridge and brought him to Wilmington. He is in the Delaware Hospital here. It is believed he will recover.

Little Florence McDonnell Said Saturday to Her Mother That She Would Die

On Saturday afternoon four-year-old Florence McDonnell came whimpering from her play in the street into the kitchen of her home, 1529 Seybert street, and talked to her mother in a childish way about death. She would die some time, maybe soon. Her mother laughed and petted Florence and she returned to play.

This morning her mother went to the grocery store, and while playing in the kitchen Florence fell on the stove and was
