a recent Illness.

OF COURSE, the world and his wife will rush out to Franklin Field today or line the streets down which the French Commission will pass, for all the world loves a soldier, and especially a great one such as Joffce.

And Americans are always at the fore where a hero is concerned, you know, So from the station to every stopping place on the route General Joffre and Minister Viviani will be greeted by all citizens who are good men and true. There was great consternation yesterday when it was learned that the untoward accident to their private train in Indiana would keep the delegates back until tomorrow. However, we'll get a chance to see them today, I hope.

THE first out-of-doors fate of the season will be ! eld today at Bryn Mawr Park for the benefit of the Social Serv ice of the Bryn Mawr Hospital.

Judging from all I have heard of the preparations and booth decorations it will be a splendid affair. Mrs. William Philler is at the head, and will be assisted by a great number of women who live out on the Main Line.

There will be every kind or attraction possible, it seems to me. Really, I sometimes wonder how they can think up so many and such a variety of side shows

It's a funny thing, you know, but every one loves to have his or her hand read, and when it is done in the spirit of fun and deals only with one's charac ter and simply pretends to tell the past, but not the future, it's all right. Well. Madame Zita will be on hand all day today and great will be the revelations of

The Boy Scouts are to drill and there is to be a suffrage table and an antisuffrage table, and every church on the Main Line is to be represented at one or more tables. As for the things for sale and the eats which may be had for a small amount, well, it will be hard to believe that there is a scarcity of food, as they tell us there is.

Then, my dears, there is to be a beauty show, presided over by Margot Scull and Hannah Randolph, and many are the guesses and questions on this subject. What do you suppose these girls are going to do? I bet they have some joke up their sleeves, or maybe it is a real honest-'to-goodness beauty show made up of the debutantes of the season. Or perhaps, better still, those of coming years, who would probably Le less selfconscious about it.

There are to be movies and pony rides. and every fancy article ever made under the shining sun will be found at the many booths.

TTHEN out at the Pennsylvania Museum at Memorial Hall, in Fairmount Park, this afternoon there will be the much-looked-forward-to private view of the loan exhibition of old American and English silver, and a number of society women will be there to receive the guests, while tea will be served from 4 until 6 o'clock.

Some really wonderful things will be on exhibit. The Ben Chews have loaned the tea set, which was owned by Mr. Chew's great-great-grandfather, Benjamin Chew, who was Chief Justice of Pennsylvania.

Mrs. William M. Bennett is exhibiting a pair of sugar tongs once owned by Joseph Graff, in whose house Thomas Jefferson, who was living there at the time, wrote the Declaration of Independence. I really can't begin to tell you of the numerous exquisite and wonderful things in the way of American and Engish heirlooms that are at present in the historic hall, which dates back to the Centennial. Certainly it is an exhibition which no one should miss.

The private view is being held under the auspices of the board of trustees and the associate committee of women of the Pennsylvania Museum and School of Industrial Art, which for this year includes the Governor of the State, ex-officio; Mrs. Rudolph Blankenburg, Charles Bond, James Butterworth, John G. Carruth, Harrington Fitzgerald, Mrs. Henry S. Grove, John Gribbel, Charles H. Hard ing. Thomas Skelton Harrison, John Story Jenks, Gustav Ketterer, the Mayor of the city, ex-officio; John H. The associate committee of women to the board of trusteees includes: President. #### MUSIC LOVERS TO FOUND NEW BIG ORGANIZATION

Will Meet Tonight in Effort to Make Philadelphia Great

The foundation for another big musical organization in this city will be laid to-night at a meeting in the Musical Art Club 102 South Seventeenth street, called by the leaders in the various fields of musical en-deavor. The new organization will have for its aims the spreading over the United States and Europe of the unequaled advantages of Philadelphia for students and lovers of music and the giving of pub-licity to musical activities in this city.

The following are members of a preliminary committee on organization: Dr. William H. Green, president of the Musical Art Club; Thomas a Becket, department of music, Girard College; Edward Bok, editor-in-chief of Ladies' Home Journal; Henry Gordon Thunder, conductor of Philadelphia Choral Society: Mrs. Frederick W. Abbott, president of Matinee Musical Club; Andrew Wheeler, secretary of Philadelphia Or-chestra Association; Dr. Charles D. Hart, executive committee of Philadelphia Or-chestra Association, and Dr. Edward L. Keffer C. von Sternberg, of the orchestra directorate and a composer and planist.

THE STORY THUS FAR CAPTAIN RICHARD HOLLIS, of the CAPTAIN RICHARD HOLLIS, of the Alias Line, who retired from service when his father, owner of the company, died and left him a small fortune, is one of a number of gueste on board the yacht Esmereida, owned by Carrington, copper king and millionaire, of New York.

VERA is a young woman of nineteen, who has bribed a petty officer of the yacht to secrete her on board. The yachting party is absolutely stag because Carrington has a business scheme in mind. He wants to corner the corper market because of the Great War. Hollis discovers Vera one night, but promises to keep her secret until the craft is one day out to see, when the girl is to disclose her identity to Carrington.

FERGUS McCANN, a millionaire, slightly known to Hollis, is another guest.

The second might cut a tramp steamer wrocks the yacht. All but Hollis, Vera and McCann are sayed and picked up by the beat. Hollis forces Mctenn to help him liberate the sirl locked in a stateroom. The three their escape is the light dory trailing from the stern of the yacht.

The third night out they sight a craft, the Indian Chief, of Philadelphia, which takes them on board, when it is learned that Hollis can navigate the boat. The indian Chief is in a pitiable condition, having been wrecked in a storm. The vessel is chief is in a pittable condition, naving been wrecked in a storm. The vessel is loaded to Jhe hatches with a carao of munitions of war consigned to Hamburg.

PHILIP RASCOM, the owner of the ship, has staked his entire fortune in the venture. Upon its success depends his future, and that of his mother, in Philadelphia. When Vera recognizes Hascom as an old Paim Beach acquaintance, she urges Holis to take command of the ship and run it into Hamburg. Itsseem is a cripple as the result of a shooting affair in which McCann, in a fealous raze, fred at him. hascom, however, was innocent of any compileity with the woman.

Hellis takes command and chooses Leavord as his first mate and Olson as second mate. He then learns that McCann has informed the crew of the war, and is spreading money and glorious promises among the men if they land him safely at an American port, cann is made a prisoner to keep him.

McCann is made a prisoner to keep him away from the crew. When Hollis takes the ship's position a few days later White and Liversool, the leading insurgents among the men, show particular interest in the exact location of the ship as come in the case the same particular interest.

CHAPTER XIX-(Continued) WHICH theory looks reasonable enough," I acknowledged, after a pause, "although it's more my judgment that the arrest of McCann has left them leaderless. I am not really looking for any more serious trouble. However, we'll be ready for it if it comes."

CHAPTER XX A Glimpse of a Woman's Heart

THE afternoon brought me increased THE afternoon brought me increased faith that the imprisonment of Fergus McCann had virtually ended the rebellion of the men forward. No doubt the spirit of mutany still lingered, but without his leadership this had ceased to be dangerous. Unbacked by the New Yorker's display of wealth, Liverpool Red and Jim White were suddenly shorn of power to control the crew.

of course these two were not of the kind to yield without a struggle; there would inevitably be an effort of some sort made to discover McCann's exact whereabouts and release him. But this could be easily guarded against. Even in the darkest night there was small chance of any member of the crew being able to slip aft along the main deck unseen, and I took precaution to close, and lock securely, the only passageway below which led forward. Whatever scheme the two ringleaders might Of course these two were not of the whatever scheme the two ringleaders might whatever scheme the two ringleaders might evolve. I felt we were now in position to Whatever scheme the two ringleaders might evolve. I felt we were now in position to effectively block. Their only possible chance of success, of obtaining control of the ship, lay in the exercise of force. Undoubtedly there were men enough forward to overwhelm us by sheer force of numbers, if they became desperate enough to make the attention.

But I no longer felt fear of this; not But I no longer felt fear of this; not only had the impression been left upon me as I faced them that they had already lost the spirit of resistance, but there was no gathering in groups forward, no whispered conferences no indication of any kind to lead ne io suspect they were planning action. White had gone below with his watch, while Liverpool was serving his trick at the wheel. Not so much as a word had been exchanged between the two since I had dismissed the crew. Probably their questionings had been prompted merely by curiosity, and not because of any purpose already fixed in their minds.

Nor did anything occur during the re-already fixed in their minus.

Nor did anything occur during the remainder of the day to lead me to revise this conclusion. The weather held fair, and the men worked cheerfully. Now that the liquor was out of them they proved themselves a fairly efficient crew, obeying the orders of the mates smartly. No occurrence areas for me to interfere, and even themselves a fairly efficient crew, obeying the orders of the mates smartly. No occasion arose for me to interfere, and even Leayord expressed approval and surprise. I made a brief tour of the decks, noting that things were shipshape and in order in spite of the remnants of wreck forward, and then visisted the engine room below, interviewing Masters, and giving him personal insetructions relative to the duties of the coming night. All was quiet in his department, and the stokers were attending to their work. Apparently the crisis had been passed, and the only problem remaining to confront us was that of navigation. With my mind at rest on this point, I passed the hours of the afternoon largely in my own stateroom, sleeping for an hour or more in preparation for the night's watch on deck, and later carefully figuring out in detail the exact course I should attempt to follow during the period of darkness.

Before the call to supper came, I called on Bascom te explain to him the situation, but found the man stupefied by some drug,

Before the call to supper came, I called on Bascom te explain to him the situation, but found the man stupefied by some drug, taken perhaps to alleviate pain, and scarcely capable of comprehending my meaning. Satisfied that I could gain no assistance from him, I left the man lying helplessly in his bunk, and returned to the main cabin. Vera did not appear until after-Leayord and I were scated at table, yet she had been on deck during the afternoon, and had much to say relative to the beauty of the ocean scene through which we sailed. It was a pleasant hour we present the stable. Leayore the country of the death of the country of the ocean scene through which we sailed.

Dade I presume, something of Bascom's present condition, and I felt obliged to answer her questions frankly, although I ex-cused the man as much as possible, and led the talk into happier channels. How-ever, she told us more of his history and family, relating in some detail her former acquaintance. The conversation drifted acquaintance. The conversation drifted idly, and, when assured that Dade was safely beyond earshot, we spoke briefly of our plans, and outlined our future. Even Leayord had lost his suspicions of the men forward, and expressed his belief that our voyage would be without further serious internal trouble.

I gave him instructions to change the vessel's course and order an increase of speed when he returned to take charge of the deck, and a few moments later noted with satisfaction that the telltale compass overhead indicated that we were headed straight into the north, and could fee! the throbbing of the engines and straining of the hull as we raced forward.

In spite of the pleasant day and that the sun was still visible in the western sky the air on deck was chill, and I returned below for a heavier coat and also brought back with me a cloak belonging to the late commander with which to protect Miss Car-rington. She laughed gayly as I wrapped it about her shoulders, for it was an oldfashioned garment, evidently picked up in some foreign port and retained as a curi-osity, but its warmth was welcome. The evening was a beautiful one, the sky clear, the sea caim, except for the long ocean swell. But for a faint trail of smoke far to the westward, barely visible as the sun sank below the horizon, no evidence was discernible of any other vessel in the wide circle. I halled the lookout in the maintop, but the wisp of smoke was too far away for his eyes to determine the course of the distant steamer, although as he swept his glasses a bit farther northward they became fixed and motionless. him his voice reported: "Sail ho!" "Where away?" As I stared up at

"Certainly not: we'll not attempt to dedge every fishing smack, and if t steamer is heading this way, we will miles to the north before she reaches these waters. What is our rate now?"

"About seventeen knots, sir."
"Masters is getting the best he can out of the engines, I presume? "The old hooker has never done much better to my knowledge, sir. She never was no greyhound, but maybe, with the wind from that quarter, the sails might be trimmed to help a little."

"The experiment is worth trying, Mr.
Leayord. Send Olson forward."

"Aye, aye, sir." Both watches were on deck, clustered in a restiess bunch before the forecastle, or overhanging the rail, evidently deeply in-terested in observing our efforts to get all possible speed out of the Indian Chief. The fading light gave me glimpse of their faces, and I noticed that both Liverpool and White were circulating freely from group to group. However, the men responded readily enough to Olson's orders, and sang cheerily as they tailed onto the ropes, Liverpool himself leading the way up the rathers and out upon the mainyard as they sheeted home. The job was rather smartly done, and the canvas belied out so stiffly that I suspected there was more wind sloft than was felt on deck. Olson remained forward, and we could hear his voice assigning the men to various tasks as they returned to

"Is that all, sir?" asked Leayord from "All at present; very smartly done at "There are sallormen among 'em, sir. Shall I send the port watch below?"

"Not yet; Mr. Olson seems to be finding work for all hands, and they are better off kept busy. Perhaps the ship would rise easier, Mr. Lesyord, if you let her head off a point—there is some danger of straining the steering gear.

"Aye, aye, sir-let her off a point, Carl-

"Aye, aye, sir—let her off a point, Carlson; easy now."

The stars began to pop out in the arch of sky above, silvering the waters, and we could no longer perceive what was taking place forward. The night shades settled about us, and the stanch Indian Chief drove her sharp bows through the black waste of sea in a race to cross the zone of danger before the coming of another dawn. Apparently everything was in our favor, and I stood there, leaning against the rail, chatting with Miss Vera, our conversation drifting idly. Darkness shadowed us, with only a bit of deck revealed by the faint light streaming through the glass of the companion. The riding lamps were not lit, as I preferred to take chances, assured companion. The riding lamps were not lit, as I preferred to take chances, assured that we were alone in that expanse of ocean. Things grew quiet forward and Olson returned aft, pausing a morpent to report to me, before clambering up the ladder to rejoin Leayord.

It must have been after nine when the girl left, complaining of being chilled even in the protection of the great cloak. I crossed the deck with her to the head of the stairs, and our hands clasped as we lingered there a moment, the dim light' revealing her face uplifted toward mine.

"You are not going below, then, Mr. Hollis?" she questioned. "Surely all goes weil?"

"So remarkably well," I admitted, "as to rather pussie me. No, I shall remain on deck until morning; not that I really anticipate trouble, but the entire remonability contains the state of the state of

"I know it will, if you remain on deck," she answered earnestly. "I—I have learned to trust you."

"In seamanship?" I asked banteringly.
"Why my ability in that line has scarcely been tested as yet."

"I do not mean seamanship-altogether. T do not mean seamanship—altogether. Yet I have had experience enough at sea to recognize a sailor. But it is in everything I trust you. Mr. Hollis. Really I—I think I have felt that way from the first."

"On the Esmeralda?"

"Yes, even then. That was only a lark, a joke, and I had to keep hidden until the right moment. I did not avoid you from any lack of faith in your discretion—but to ve you from temptation."

"Very nicely put; yet the real temptation."
"Very nicely put; yet the real temptation was not to reveal your presence on board."
"You confessed you questioned my father." "True, yet in a most indirect manner.
My sole object was to keep your dis-covery to myself."
"Isn't that foolish? I have heard of seem to you an age."

"Are you fifteen years older than I?"
"I suspect as much, and the thought of what that must mean to you is—well, most embarrassing."

She laughed, withdrawing her hand from mine and resting it on the stair rail.

"Why, really, I never once thought of that. Do you know, I have not associated very much with those of my own age, so, perhaps, I fail to realize that a few years constitute a harrier. You would have been staid to be a second to the second to th constitute a barrier. You—you have been so nice to me. Mr. Hollis, I have never no-ticed a single gray hair."

"Nevertheless they are there to be seen."
"I do not care, sir! If you were as gray as my father you would be just the same man you are to me." She hesitated, as though suddenly realizing that she was speaking very freely. "Perhaps I venture too far, but we did not meet in a drawing room; there are no strict social rules out there is nevertheless the state."
