YOUNG BANKERS GET READY FOR BUSY YEAR

Educational Work Takes in All Branches in Financial Institutions—Course Four Years

Philadelphia's young bankers, who are members of the Philadelphia Chapter American Institute of Banking, are now making preparations for the educational work which will be carried on by the chapter this year for the younger bank and trust company employes of the city. William W. Allen, Jr., the president of the chapter, is devoting a great deal of his time in connection with the other officers to make the coming year's work one to be remembered.

To those who are not intimately associated with banking, usually coming no nearer to the bank clerk than conversations in a business way through the wicket, a summary of the work carried on by the various chapters, of which there are more than seventy situated in different parts of the country, is not amiss.

This city has the distinction of having the second largest chapter and, too, the work done here in an educational way is broader than in other cities.

In the standard course of study in the Philadelphia Chapter, which starts in October and ends in May, two years are devoted to commercial law and two years to the theory and practice of banking. In the former subject one year is given to the study of the law of negotiable instruments, while the other year is taken up with the remaining branches of commercial law, such as: contracts, bailments, carriers, partnership law, corporation law, bankruptcy, etc.

The two years' work done in banking shows a most interesting array of topics. In the first year these are: Money, exchange and credit; banking functions; bank organization and administration; deposits; reserves; collections and transits; clearing houses; loans and discounts; circulation and analysis of the daily bank statement as a barometer of conditions.

The topics of the second year are: The Federal reserve act, corporation finance, bonds and corporation notes, stocks and their futures, security markets, credit department (a) commercial paper, (b) borrowers' statement and their analysis; foreign exchange, advertising and new business. Those company men in Philadelphia are received to take the four years, but in the second year in banking there are certain electives which they may choose while the bank men are studying the Federal reserve act and the credit department. These elective studies have to deal with subjects which are peculiarly fitted to trust company men, such as wills, trusts, decedents' estates, real estate, etc.

The classes taught by the local chapter next winter will be as follows: Commercial law; first class in banking, as outlined above; elementary banking; post-graduate course in the history of finance; class in elementary banking for the large number of young women who are now being employed in the banks and trust companies.

Socialism

How It Failed to Seize Its Great Opportunity in Germany; Its Future in America

By JOHN SPARGO

Formerly of the National Executive Committee of the American Socialist Party

IN AUGUST, 1914, International Socialism was the victim of a great disaster. The German Social Democratic Party—the strongest Socialist body in the world — was confronted with the greatest opportunity ever presented to a popular movement of the masses. The opportunity was the chance to oppose to the limit of endurance and sacrifice the bellicose policy of the Imperial German Government.

The German Social Democratic Party failed miserably, and thereby brought grief and despair to the millions of Socialists in other lands. And German Socialism is not the only branch that has failed, according to Mr. John Spargo. In a powerful article on Socialism in tomorrow's Public Ledger he says "the Socialist Party in America is doomed." Yet from it a new party is emerging—a party of popular freedom and industrial democracy, free from the taint of sentimental pacifism and without apology for German militarism.

Mr. Spargo's article is the most powerful pronouncement on Socialism made since the war began.
