THERE ARE OTHER "BARKERS" BESIDES THE RECRUITING OFFICER. A realistic demonstration of the use of the 4.7 howitzers civilians and instructs the audience at the Postoffice of the Second Pennsylvania Field Artillery.

ERECTING A BARRIAGE OF SANDBAGS AT THE FORT MYER TRAINING CAMP. Recruits for the Officers' Reserve Corps from New Jersey and Delaware are rapidly acquiring one of the rudiments of field warfare, that a soldier's first duty is to take care of his own safety when in the presence of the enemy.

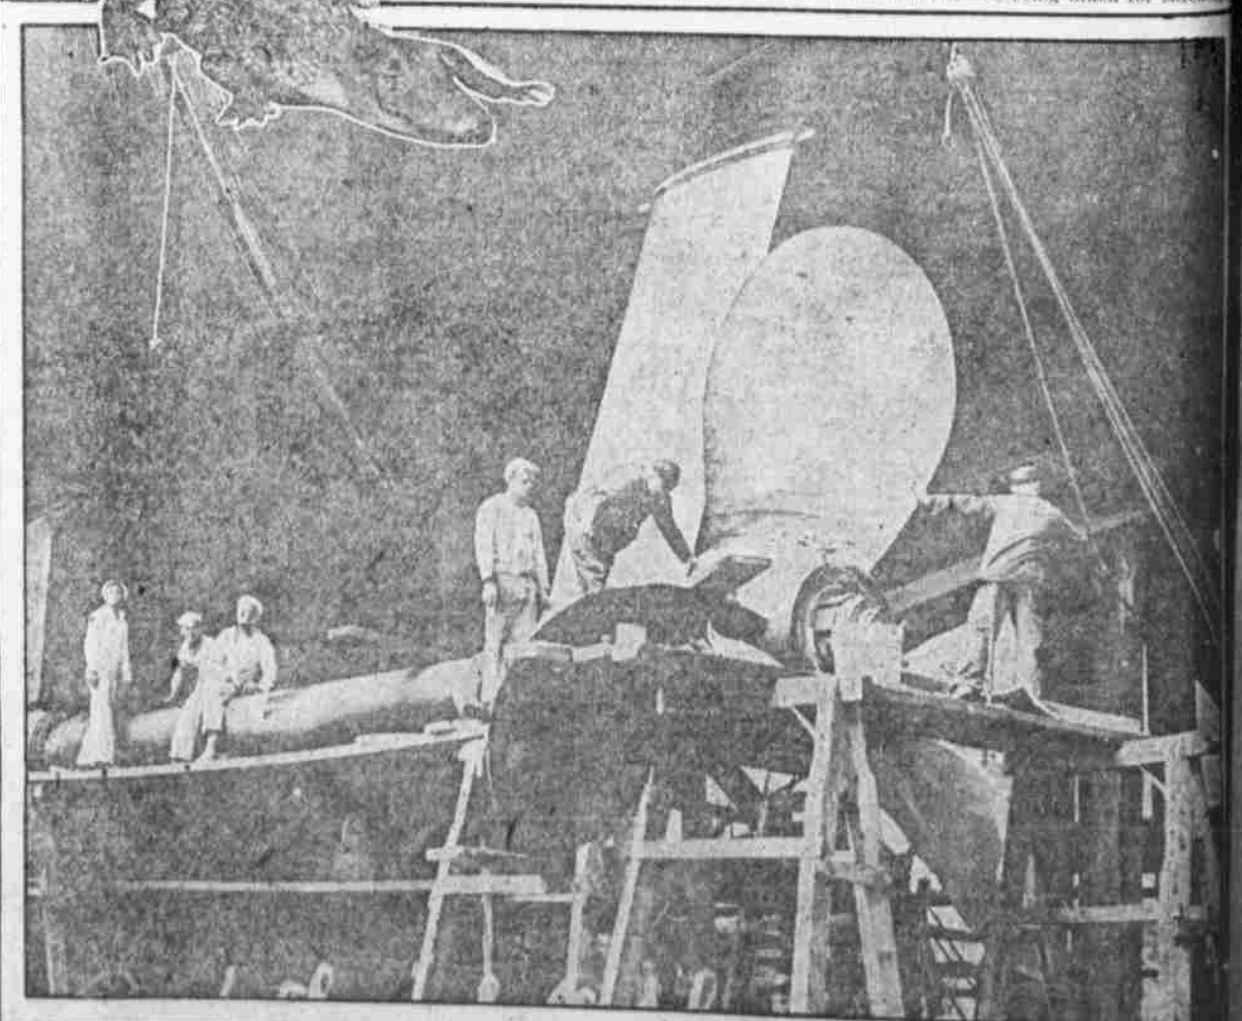

Camera Cullings That Visualize News Interesting to Philadelphia

"AWAY DOWN SOUTH IN DIXIE" THEY ALL WOULD FEEL AT HOME. Three denizens of the "Swampy River" district, two of whom are happy residents of Philadelphia, the alligator, by the way, was the cause of a brief reign of terror when it escaped from a pen at the Washington and Pine streets station, where it was being taken for safekeeping.

NOT EVEN THE SEASHORE CAN WEAN AWAY THESE NAIADS FROM WEST PHILADELPHIA. These warm July days find full attendance at the swimming classes that are conducted to the combined health and instruction of pupils at the Sherwood Recreation Center.

REPAIRING THE PROPELLER OF ONE OF UNCLE SAM'S DREADNOUGHTS. In these days of submarine foes quick and perfect response to the driving power is all-essential. This photograph, passed by the censor, shows how this perfection is maintained.
