The Hundredth Chance Ethel M. Dell

"In the days of jaded novel readers, it is quite a feat to carry one back to the 'St. Elmo' type of novel. One does not judge a novel like this till after it is finished. One simply devours it, without stopping—reviewed critically, it is sentimental, melodramatic, and the characters are either 'pitchy black' or 'angelically white'..."

The Gun Brand James B. Hendryx

The story of a feud in the Great Northwest Territory—a story where civilization and savagery lock in the death struggle; where men of iron hearts are molded by a woman's tenderness; where knave and knight cross the barriers to confront each other in the great reckoning; where nobility and courage throw down the gage to evil and intrigue and the gun brand leaves its seared and indelible impress upon the brow of a scoundrel. A novel of love and life, danger and daring.

The Man in Evening Clothes John Reed Scott

Debonair, relentless, this master criminal, believed by many to be a member of the social set, terrorizes Washington Society, as he goes about, armed with an automatic, faultlessly dressed, and masked—robbing the households of the Capital. Never has Mr. Scott's facility for creating tense situations been better displayed.

The Stars in Their Courses Hilda M. Sharp

"An unusually readable story, which will win out with readers who want the story for its own sake. We can well imagine it becoming unusually popular."—Detroit Saturday Night.
