SIR JOHN HARE FINE IN "CASTE" PICTURE

Eminent British Player Displays Niceties of Comedy and Make-Up as Eccles

By the Photoplay Editor "Caste." Greater Vitagraph, with Sir in Hare and Pegay Hyland. Story adapted in Thomas W. Robertson's play. Directed Larry Trimbie.

Oldstern who cherish "Caste" as one of the things of pearl, and those younger theatregoers who saw Marie Tempest's allstar revival at the Broad a few years ago, want to see this. Made in Englant. feature lacks the usual indefiniteness murky camera work of most British little story, capitally faithful to the original nedy and leisurely but legitimately dedoped. In London, probably, the billing loally benighted America, tew know of him, so Miss Hyland's name is prominently dis-played. Sir John's performance is worth any actor's study. In the matter of mere facial make-up he is a master. Eccles's pompous drunkenness is brought out through such delicate touches as the rheumy mough such delicate touches as the rheumy mose, the straggling, unhenithy whishers, the mop of untidy white hair. And his comic sense is sure and restrained. We ought to have some more pictures with this player in them. Miss flyland is pretty in her coloriess way. The others are extremely good. It is a pleasant bit of entertainment.

Selig's big movie, "The Crisis," has been socked at the Garrick for three weeks, eginning August 12. This is a picturiza-ion of the well-known novel by Winston Thurchill, played on the stage by James K. runs two hours and forty minutes (slightly shorter than "intolerance"), and there is a big list of people used in connection with its presentation, including an orchestra of twenty-four, twenty-two real actors and six men for "effects". The young women unhors will be dressed in costume of the period. At the entrance to the playhouse a darkskinned "mammy" will greet patrons and distribute programs. A string orchestra will play old-time southern melodies. Em-blems and flags of the Confederacy and jasamine perfume will also bring to mind the period of the play.
