

CHEER UP, BOOZERS, HOPE HASN'T FLED

Barkeep Ready to Quench Thirsts With Alcoholic Concoctions of Varied Sorts

BEYOND BAN OF LAW

What Do You Say to Kickapoo Indian Sagwa and Similar Mixtures by the Score?

Anti-prohibition version of a popular song. Oh, boy, oh, boy, what shall we drink this year? They've got the bun on booze, but choose some to use and beer!

Charge, honest bar flies! While there's life there's hope. If the Government does not boot the eye, like the lazzie in the old Scotch ballad, and don't you care if Congress does take the burr out of booze...

And where will you get it? Well, to be exact, there are prescriptions by the Department of Internal Revenue each and every one of which to use the barkeeper's language, contains his hefty list of alcoholic drinks...

The money should worry? So although whisky should be no longer manufactured and the present stocks go up in price to double or quadruple their prices...

It is easy to picture a scene in any saloon in the East. For example, enter a carmine-nosed individual, who takes his stand at the bar after paying at the brass footfall in the good old fashion...

Carmine-nosed individual to bartender, "Howdy, mister! Me up Jamaica Ginger cocktail, with chaser Ferro Chino-Titanian on side!"

Here, firmly: "Nothin' doin', old top. You know as well as I do that there is 12-16-18-20 per cent pure alcohol in this Jamaica Ginger cocktail alone, to say nothing of 14-18-20-24 per cent of alcohol in this chaser. What do you want to do, buy me call an ambulance to take you to Ruckley?"

Carmine-nosed individual: "Well, gimme a straight drink of Kickapoo Indian Sagwa and the gin' to be doggone careful of me, then."

Here: "Oh, very well, take your Sagwa. There's only 7-10 per cent of alcohol in that, and it's as much as there is in a glass of beer."

Carmine-nosed individual drinks the rest of the afternoon moodily, spouting Sagwa and is ejected after he sags beyond utterance.

And so with festive dinner parties. Instead of opening a bottle of champagne, which contains less than 12 per cent of alcohol and which is as much as 45 per cent of alcohol as the label from a cart of Hostetter's Bitters, which contains 10 per cent of alcohol and which costs $1.10 a bottle, and serves it to his convivial guests. If they are not staiders for "bouquet," the effect will be much more lasting and far cheaper.

There will be the one who want a nip of brandy and who will get it after the food bill is enacted, by calling for Cauffmann's ginger brandy, made in Philadelphia, with 12 per cent of pure alcohol. "Old-fashioned" brandy itself has only 46 per cent of alcohol and costs a darn sight more than Cauffmann's. What's the odds?

"MADE IN PHILADELPHIA" list of the Internal Revenue Department follows:

First honors of the day went to Team No. 5, led by Julius E. Mastbaum, which collected $1485.

TWO METHODS OF HANDLING VICE IN TWO KINDS OF COURTS

Magistrate's Hearings Compared With Trials in Misdemeanant's Branch of the Municipal Court Before Judge Brown

Thirty women of this city, who were accused of breaking certain laws, were dealt with yesterday morning—one group of thirteen by Magistrate Tracy, at the Eleventh and Winter streets police station—another group of seventeen at the misdemeanant's branch of the Municipal Court by Judge Brown.

Until recently the police have refused to permit the Municipal Court to have anything to do with cases of this sort, insisting that they be handled by magistrates. The reports below are printed for the sole purpose of permitting the public to make its own comparison as to the merits of the opposing methods and jurisdictions.

MAGISTRATE TRACY'S HEARING Thirteen girls and women had been arrested Saturday night in Chinatown, accused of hanging around and accosting men in some instances. Seven of these had been able to bribe their way out of the station Sunday morning. The rest had been taken in a van and sent to Moyamensing prison. This was their further hearing.

The Eleventh and Winter streets police station is an clean as could be expected, considering the number and character of the nightly occupants. Yesterday morning, long a hundred people were packed in the room, nearly all of them were poor, and many of them were peddlers, lawyers' runners, etc. The girls were lined up before the magistrate.

"You six have been down below," said the magistrate, "I guess I guess I guess you fellows all enlisted in the army or what?"

The prisoners were accused by the police officers of checking about the Tenderloin, talking to sailors and creating disorder. One girl whispered that she was married, and a rather respectable man with glasses took her arm. The girl said she was married, and the police said they knew her. A smooth-faced young man said that he was her husband, and in reply to a question by the magistrate, he said he was a musician. The police laughed at this, and two policemen openly accused the young fellow of living off the earnings of the girl.

At this point about a half dozen men, who had been in checkered suits and with gold teeth and others without collars, edged closer to the proceedings. "Their girls are coming up," whispered a cop. The checked suit, gold-toothed men had been hanging around the outside of the station house, several of them having buttonholed the Magistrate as he entered.

"Then the girls come in. Some of those who had been to prison were trembling and looked as if they were about to faint. Obviously, they needed their stimulants, whatever they were. The magistrate, who was rather amused by the scene, turned to one of the girls who was looking at him with a look of indignation to smile.

"The hangers-on in the courtroom laughed heartily as the miserable line trailed up the stairs. The magistrate discharged all of them, at the same time telling them that they would be sent to the House of Correction if they failed to appear before him again. It was rather amusing to see four lawyers trying to get a word in edgewise so that they might gain some modicum of the credit for 'getting the girls off.'

Virtually every girl, even before she had left the room, was met by a man. Some of the men seemed to be rather peevish and grasped the girls roughly by the arms, rather menacingly under the influence of something which made them caper and cut up a caper.

"Some of the girls will get beat up for getting in the line again," it was said. "When they get out of the streets right off again by night!" "Yanked" means under the influence of drugs.

PRISON INQUIRY HEAD RESIGNS TRENTON, N. J., July 18.—Tendering his resignation as chairman of the prison inquiry commission to Governor Edge today, William B. Dickson, of Montclair, caused another surprise at the State House.

Only a few days ago Dickson gave up his place as president of the board of prison inspectors after serving in the office less than one month. His action is interpreted as the result of disappointment in not having the government of the prison fashioned along the lines which he desired.

SECOND SUIT DELAYS PARKWAY FREE LIBRARY

Man Who Forced Use of Philadelphia Cut Stone Now Objects Because of Price

A new suit over the question as to whether or not Philadelphia shall be put to hundreds of thousands of dollars of expense by having stone for public building cut here is threatened. Such a suit would again delay work on the planned Free Library on the Parkway with the probable result of the building costing a great deal more than present estimates, which are $204,695 in excess of figures of three months ago.

No sooner had the construction work been awarded to John Gill & Sons, of Cleveland, at $2,025,000 than Frederick C. Newbourn, Jr., counsel for Walter R. Taylor, announced that as over $100,000 could be saved the city on the contract, if the stone were cut outside the city, it would raise the issue as to the constitutionality of the ordinance making the cutting of stone in Philadelphia compulsory.

Some time ago a suit started by Walter R. Taylor prevented the letting of the contract to the George E. Fuller Company at $2,064,255. The same work, according to present estimates, will cost the city a total of $2,062,395. Both figures include heating, plumbing and electrical work. The threatened suit is likely to hold up work for several months, and in the event of its success, the city would be obliged to pay a third thing will become necessary.

In justification for the delaying tactics, Attorney Newbourn declares that to allow the stone to be cut in Philadelphia for the free library, an museum and convention hall would cost the city and taxpayers $500,000. City officials claim that the loss due to delays occasioned by the suits will be in excess of that total.

TARS TO PLAY BASEBALL GAME WITH LOGAN CLUB Members of American Battleship Will Meet Uptown Athletics Next Saturday

While the band of a United States battleship in port here plays patriotic airs, the baseball team of that ship next Saturday will participate in a game of baseball with the members of the Logan baseball team. The game will be played on the newly improved campus of the Logan Athletics Club, located at Old York road and Loudon street.

Naval officers from the Philadelphia Navy Yard, as well as officers from the Brooklyn Navy Yard, will view the game.

Reading playing ball there will be a drill by the Jefferson Hospital unit which shortly will leave this city for France from where it will be dispatched to the front. Many of the members of the Jefferson Hospital unit are composed of doctors of Logan and Jefferson Hospital.

Logan next Saturday will celebrate "Stanley Son Willis Day," because on that day the ship was located at Old York road and Loudon street. Naval officers from the Philadelphia Navy Yard, as well as officers from the Brooklyn Navy Yard, will view the game.

Readers by sending this coupon for nomination for associate judgeship will receive a free primer for housewives on canning and drying food.

Whisky Revenue Takes Jump LANCASTER, Pa., July 18.—The July receipts of the ninth internal revenue district to date from whisky stamps is $57,000, the average monthly receipts in the following months being $30,000. It is due to the big run in the payment on whisky taken from bond because of the bill pending in Congress for abolishing whisky making.

ADVICE TO THE HOME-BUILDER OF MODERATE MEANS

By VICTOR EBERHARD, R. Arch., R. A.

Both of these types of inside trim avoid the necessity of mitered corners. The example at the right is taken from an old Colonial house; its charm rests in the excellence of its mitered section. It is better in small houses to employ as narrow a trim as possible, 5 1/2 inches as a maximum width, 4 to 4 1/2 inches far better.

The Kitchen and Its Accessories The kitchen where there will be one or two maids differs principally from the one in which the housewife will do all her own work in that space for sitting and eating must be provided for the maids. Either it must be made larger to afford an open space near a window or, perhaps better, an alcove should be provided off the kitchen for their sitting and dining space, leaving the small kitchen to remain as it is.

When there are two maids a pantry is found a convenience, a place where the dishes and silver may be washed and stored. In laying out the pantry it is necessary only to see that the sink will not stand that the maid at the sink will not stand in the passage between dining room and kitchen or that dresser or cupboard doors do not project into the passage when open and that there is sufficient dresser space for the dishes and linen which to store.

A porch of comfortable size also should be in the rear of the house for the comfort of servants. A good, well-ventilated bedroom for their use must also be thought of. This is best placed directly over the kitchen on the second floor and connected directly to the kitchen or pantry, preferably to the pantry when there is one, by a small stair. This stairway should have a landing on the second floor in a small hall, from which, by means of a door, other parts of the second floor can be reached.

It is more troublesome, on account of the distance from the kitchen, to arrange for the servants' room on the third floor. Servants, in order that they be able to work well, should have a comfortable, well-ventilated room to sleep in. The third floor is usually warm and badly ventilated. There is, however, no reason why a third floor should be warm and uncomfortable. The usual heat is not caused, as many imagine, by the rooms being so close to the roof, so much as by the warm air which rises from the floors below. This can be overcome by having a ventilator over the third-floor stairs and an insulation placed between the roof and the plastering to prevent heat from this quarter. By thus making the third floor habitable, it will be better to place the servants' room on the second floor over the kitchen.

Questions and Answers Is it not good thing to have a head over the kitchen range? Yes, if a vent is connected to it at the top and run up above the roof. It will assist materially in carrying the heat and cooking odors from the kitchen.

Small dormer windows do not allow much light and air in the attic. How is one to obtain sufficient of these necessities and still have a roof to look right on the outside? A. M. C. If the attic is to be used as a third floor, with important rooms in it, the roof should be so designed that the necessary amount of window space will be given without having.

AMERICAN FLYER CLEAR OF DESERTION CHARGE

Corporal Hinkle, of Lafayette Escadrille, Overstayed Time, Record of Which Miscarried

PARIS, July 18.—French army officials announced today they would remove the technical charge of desertion against Corporal Edward Foots Hinkle, of the Lafayette Escadrille. Hinkle overstayed his leave and failed to send any word.

Hinkle, a resident of Cincinnati, O., and forty-one years of age, did not return to his unit under doctor's orders. A certificate from this physician necessary to allow extension of Hinkle's leave in some way was lost en route to the Lafayette commander. When Hinkle did not appear at the expiration of his leave, his commander was forced to list him as a deserter. Hinkle is ill with pleurisy.

Dr. Gros, in charge of recruiting of Americans for service in the French army, and an acquaintance of Hinkle's, said the desertion charge against the Cincinnati man was "purely technical."

"I understand he will remain in France, although he is ill. His age is also a factor in the extenuating circumstances of the case," said Doctor Gros.
