GREATEST ELECTRICAL POWER NOW DEVELOPING ALONG DELAWARE RIVER

Vast Industrial Area in Philadelphia, Extending Into Delaware County, Will Reflect Unprecedented Municipal Progress

The greatest development in electrical power in the history of the country is being carried out in the great industrial area along the Delaware River in Greater Philadelphia and in Delaware County.

The future of industrial business and demand for electrical power therefrom appears so assured to Mr. McCall that he plans to duplicate this $14,000,000 investment on the Philadelphia end. A high-power transmission line, carrying 90,000 horsepower, erected at a cost of $200,000 and stretching from the Philadelphia power house at Twenty-sixth and Christian streets, to the Beacon light plant, at Second and Market streets, in Chester, will be in operation in about a month.

The American Railways Company, which exclusively serves about 100 miles of the Delaware River front, forty on the Delaware and sixty on the New Jersey side, has just started up a new 10,000-kilowatt power unit, in preparation for the demand for power in its territory.

CALLS FOR HALT OF WATER WASTE

Fully 50,000,000 gallons of water are being wasted in Philadelphia every twenty-four hours, according to a statement made today by Chief Carleton E. Davis, of the Water Bureau.

There is plenty of water in the Delaware and Schuylkill rivers, he said, but he added that before the heavy demands were made on the supply the city has had difficulty in maintaining an ordinary supply, because the water equipment is such that the city cannot pump, filter and deliver the water fast enough.

At this meeting Major Charles B. Warren, Judge Advocate, officers' reserve corps, and other army officials from Washington will be asked to explain how Philadelphia's quota was fixed.

"It is very apparent," said Mr. Cattell, "that our quota for the city is too high. The number of thousands of aliens were permitted to register and consider eligible for the national service when everybody in Washington was aware that not one of the aliens could be drafted."

"Eight hundred Pine street," "And what makes you claim now that you are over thirty-one, Mr. Arye?" the examiner asked in a tone that was neither sympathetic nor accusing.

"I think so. The man who christened me, but he is in New York." "Well, Mr. Arye, I have taken up your case with the adjutant general and the provost marshal and they both agree that you will have to undergo the physical examination. Step downstairs to where Doctor Taylor is waiting."

Andrew Jackson, a big, loose-jointed negro, was the first to be called. Andrew's number was 2532.

FIRST MARRIED MAN Andrew had been married, but was a widower with two young children whose grandparents were dead. Andrew claimed exemption, but Mr. Woodruff expressed curiosity as to other relatives, and the married men in the room, however, through a suggestion proceeded that something more than just a marriage certificate would have to be produced to keep them in mutli.
