

PHILADELPHIA YOUTHS AND YOUNG MEN BEING TRAINED IN SEAMANSHIP AT U. S. NAVY CAMP

HOW MANY OF THESE FELLOWS AT CAPE MAY DO YOU KNOW? Passed by Navy Yard Censor. Just a group of Philadelphians at the Navy Training School, Cape May, N. J. In the front center is H. H. Berry, son of the Collector of the Port of Philadelphia

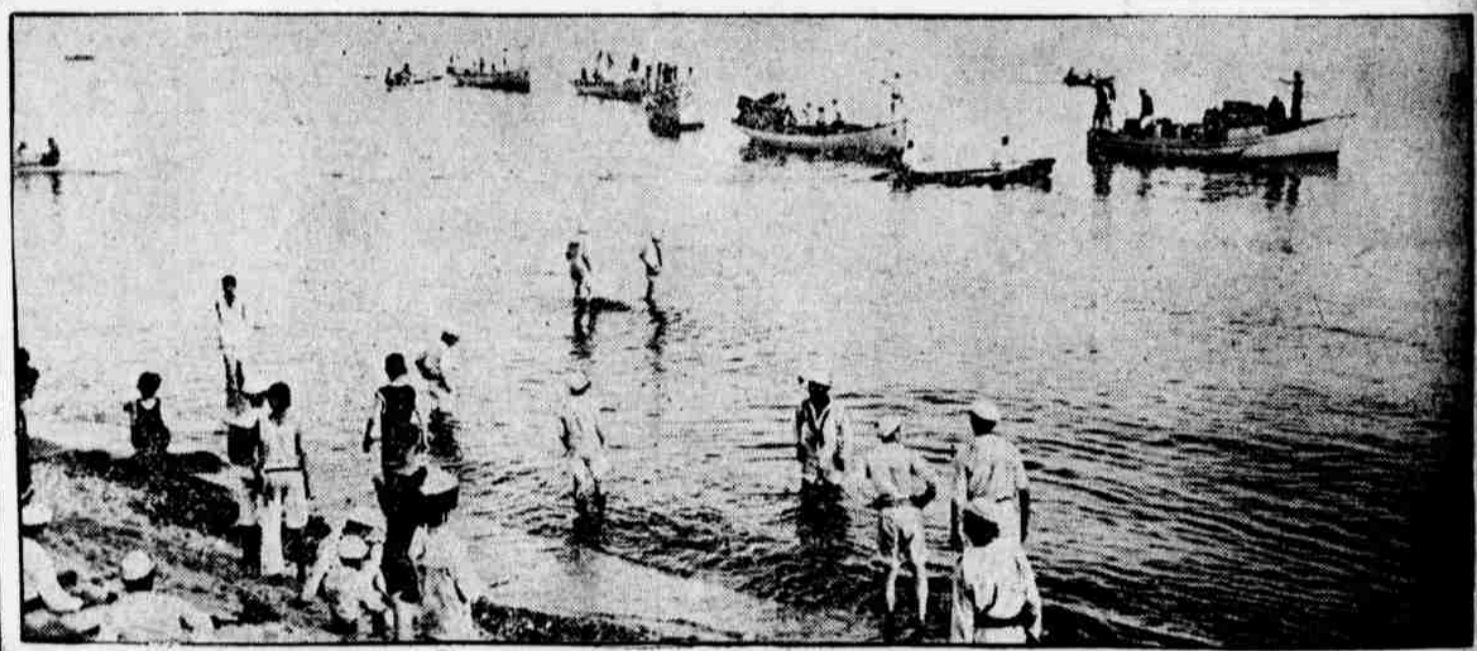

THE "FUN BARREL" MAKES A FINE "BRIG" Passed by Navy Yard Censor. The navy calls its guardhouse the "brig." Many young men who enjoyed the "fun barrel" in antebellum days now keep a good distance away from the sinister-looking gate.

PREPARING TO REPEL THE ATTACK Battles between "invaders" and "defenders" constitute an important part of the training at the camp of the Junior Naval Reserves at Camp Dewey

JUNIOR NAVAL RESERVES IN CAMP ON LONG ISLAND SOUND Camp Dewey, near New London, Conn., where the German submarine trader Deutschland put in its appearance, is being used as a training camp for youths too young to enter the regular service.

A LESSON IN SEAMANSHIP MADE INTERESTING Cutter races are always exciting, and the Junior Naval Reserves learn how to handle an oar skillfully while under the thrill and spur of lively competition.

EVERY DAY IS WASH DAY IN THE NAVY Passed by Navy Yard Censor. And when you have several white suits and no laundress to keep them clean you find it hot work—as these men at Cape May have learned.

PLANNING A SURPRISE ATTACK "Invaders," sheltered by a knoll, receiving final instructions before attempting to force a landing at Camp Dewey.