Seaside Romance

She was a "railroad magnate's daughter" when she was down beside the water and he of western things would prattle his father "owned a million cattle." It's funny how the seaside healthy starts such acquaintance 'mong the wealthy while they are taking their vacation in summer seaside recreation. They both expressed their kindly pity for poor folks sweating in the city and talked of methods of correction of housing "in the crowded sections." I smile, because some day when bringing our morning milk and gayly singing he's going to be a startled mortal when she receives him at our portal. Each morn for years with glassy rattle he's brought the product of his cattle while she's a maid my wife has hired to take the place of one she fired. Her dad's a railroad king, however, he operates a trolley lever. A magnate's daughter? Wealthy drover? Who cares if they can put it over! WILL MOORE.

The Young Lady Across the Way

The young lady across the way says she sees we're soon to be asked to buy another big issue of Liberty Bonds, and for her part she heartily approves of this plan to pay for the war as we go.

A Desperate Case

"Dear," said the fond mother, "I must punish you for disobeying my orders."

"Please, ma," said the little boy, "may I go to my room first?"

"Yes," consented the parent, and she cautiously followed her first-born upstairs. Their Robert was kneeling by his bed, and his mother heard him say:

"Dear Lord, if you ever wanted to help a little fellow in trouble, now's your chance."

The whipping was indefinitely postponed.

But How?
