YOUNG ITALIAN HERO FEATURE OF CINEMA

The official war films, "The Italian Battlefield," playing at the Garrick, are not without their picturesque side. In short, the din of battle and the horror of carnage are greatly relieved by heroic, romantic episodes that bring tears to the eyes and make one realize that war, after all, has its brighter side.

One of the greatest heroes of the European war is Baruzzi, an Italian lieutenant, only eighteen years of age. During the seizure of Gorizia, Baruzzi, with a detachment of four men, rushed into a railway tunnel leading to the city of Gorizia and captured more than 200 Austrians, with a rich booty of arms, ammunition and material.

Baruzzi made the Austrians believe that he had a force of several thousand men behind him. Therefore, when they surrendered all their equipment, emerged from the tunnel and discovered that 200 had been captured by only four Italians, their chagrin was complete.
