COMETIMES it seems as though the ! Russian women who fought in the trenches with water up to their waists and who faced the fire of machine guns most have been superhuman womendifferent from the rest of us.

Churles Edward Russell, recently returned from Russia, however, traces in wory interesting way the part Russian womanhood has played in the history of to country. He shows how it was the most natural thing in the world for the "Entialions of Death" to be formed. Mr Russell was a member of the United States Russian Cammission. He writes about Russian women in this month's Good Housekeeping.

"At the news that the Russian Battalion of Death,' formed of women sol diers," he writes, "was actually going to the firing line to be killed, the rest of the world seems to have gasped and sat up half astonished. Nobody was astonished in Russia. There to the wise observer it seemed perfectly natural. The Russian woman had no more than found a new field for her capable mind and restless energy. Why he astonished?

"She was but making some more his tory, which is getting to be her specialty and one of the best things she does. She made a thick and unforgettable volume of it last March 12 to 14, for instance, Then it was she that thrust in the lever, everturned the vast-rooted empire, and shot the once imperial and gracious Maishot the once imperial and gracious Majesty from the seat of his fathers.
