WELL, the Monday Morning Musicales are to continue this year, and all for charity. They were undoubtedly a great success last year, and Mrs. Harold Yarnall, who sponsored them last season, has decided to get them up again. And the net proceeds are to go to the American overseas committee of the Emergency Aid, which, you know, has been formed for the purpose of supplying the wants of our boys in France. The circular which attends the announcement of the musicales states: "It is in time when every effort must be made to supply our war-relief organizations with adequate funds, and at the same time it is imperative that our local musical activities be kept alive if the musical life of the city is not to retrograde. No one of the arts can supply the necessary relief from war and its attendant strain so well as music and it is therefore hoped that this twofold object of the Monday musicales will be realized."

PLAN PARTIES FOR HALLOWEEN

Sacred Heart Literary Institute of South Philadelphia Preparing a Party

When we were little at school we used to sing of the merry party that October gave, when all the pretty chestnuts and maples came dressed in their latest gowns and Miss Weather led the dancing, while Professor Wind played the band; but somehow there always seemed to be some people forgotten—the merry little elves and witches that appear right at the end, and with the ghosts and hobgoblins, stir up no end of fun and mischief. This year, as usual, there are several Halloween parties under way, one of which will be given by the Sacred Heart Literary Institute, 318 Dickinson street, on October 26. Preparations are going on apace, and from the looks of things those who have been invited are sure to have a splendid time. The committee working on the affair includes Mrs. Joseph Connolly, Mr. George Alburg, Mr. Joseph McElroy, Mr. Vincent Smith, Mr. James Convey, Mr. Bernard Nugent, Mr. William Connor, Mr. Charles Gulger, Mr. Bernard Connor, Mr. Thomas McCormick and Mr. James Lunnay.

Another masked dance is being planned by the Cor Immaculatum Club, which meets every other Monday evening in the Sacred Heart School Hall, Third and Reed streets. This is the first of a series of dances which will be given again this winter, as they proved so very popular with the members and their friends last year. The masked dance will be held on Halloween night, and from present indications promises to be most enjoyable. The members have recently started a huge knitted camp blanket to be sent to the men of the church who are down at Camp Meade. Each girl is doing a small section, and it is hoped it will be finished long before Christmas. The officers of the club are: Miss Anna H. McBride, president; Mrs. James Roberts, vice president; Miss Marguerite Connolly, secretary and treasurer.

Plans are being completed for the organization of a new auxiliary of the Red Cross to be known as the Trinity Lutheran Church, Eighteenth and Wolf streets, of which the Rev. Frank Ulrich is active pastor. Already Mrs. Arthur Claus, of 2355 South Eighth street, daughter of the Rev. Dr. S. A. K. Francis, pastor emeritus of the church, has received fifty applications for membership, and as so many of the members of the church have enlisted in some branch of the national service, or else have been drafted, it is going to be a work of love as well as duty for most of those already interested. Miss Margaret Selig has been appointed treasurer and Miss Sarah Finley secretary.

The members of the church who have entered the army and navy are Mr. W. F. Heckert, Mr. Charles Hicks, Mr. Charles Allen, Mr. Mark Vandiver, Mr. George Riggs, Mr. John Simon, Mr. Albert Freudenstein, Mr. Cleveland Foster, Jr., Mr. H. M. Montgomery, Mr. William Szelatine, Mr. Edwin Hays, Mr. Carl Anderson, Mr. Charles Stuppig, Mr. Adolph Hildebrand, Mr. George Mink, Mr. William E. McDermott, Mr. Charles Quigley, Mr. George Lutz, Mr. William S. Gault, Mr. John Norbeck, Mr. Francis Z. Dorup, Mr. Willis Phillips, Mr. Frederick Nelson, a splendid showing from one little section.

AMERICAN MUSIC WELL PRESENTED

Philadelphia Orchestra Opens Season With Interesting Works by Native Composers

Art that deliberately espouses propaganda, even though no noble cause as patriotism be furthered, is often cribbed, cabined and confined by the walls of prejudice and bigotry. Even modern France, civilized and intellectually acute as she is, has fallen into this blind alley, barred with prohibition against performing the works of Richard Wagner during the period of the war. Considered politically this situation accentuates the just scorn in which the heroic republic holds her barbarous and treacherous foe. But from the purely artistic standpoint her action is foolish. "Tristan und Isolde" remains a monument of musical beauty, notwithstanding the sinking of the Lusitania or even the fiendish bombing of Red Cross hospitals. Music and politics are widely unrelated themes.

Not a few lovers of symphonic art, therefore feared that Leopold Stokowski's presentation of an "All-American" concert program at the opening of the Philadelphia Orchestra's season yesterday afternoon in the Academy of Music might perhaps be taken more regard for loyalty in a world crisis than reverence for what is best in the field of music. It was permissible for auditors to be at once loyal and proud of their country-patriots. Charges of prejudice were thus happily quashed. Foreign music giants will have their influence in preceding concerts. It was America's turn yesterday, and so far at least as Edgar Stilleman Kelley and Arthur Foote were concerned the hearing was richly deserved.

The former was represented by a unique symphony entitled "New England" that essayed the difficult task of expressing the Puritan temperament and ideals in terms of music. The whole of the work for the four movements was derived from the quaint and touching log book of the Mayflower. The conflict of two motives suggestive respectively of duty and the human longing for the beautiful in life provides the essential material of a musical structure, fashioned with admirable continuity of thought with clarity of instrumental vision and with a sense of melodic loveliness that very successfully executes the composer's design. There are faint echoes of Beethoven's Sixth Symphony and the exquisite coloring in the treatment of an old New England hymn in the "lamentation" passage. But, in the whole, the work is original in inspiration as it is in aim. Dull moments in the score are rare and its invariable modern polyphony is authentic, sound and without straggling extravagance.

Footsteps offering in light and sympathetic vein was a tonal treatment of certain stanzas from Omar, Philip Goepfert's "Heroic March," which closed the concert, but which previously has been heard in vigorous and authoritatively written, although without distinctive charm. The "Samsun" of Rubin Goldmark proved to be a rather musty and muddy effort, but the inspiration from the field so gloriously titled by Camille Saint-Saens. The "tone poem," as Goldmark has named it, headed a program that was in fine form, and that the conductor was rapturously received. H. T. C.

TIOGA ORIGINALLY HUNTING GROUND

Large Tract Part of Logan Estate, Known as Kenderton—First Station at Tioga Had No Ticket or Baggage Agents

WHAT is now known as Tioga was originally part of the hunting grounds of the Cayuga tribe of Indians. The land passed from the original owners to William Penn by his famous treaty. Subsequently it became part of the large Logan tract and formed part of the land connected with Sollitude, an old manor that once stood, surrounded by stately trees, at Twelfth and Cambria streets. Later the large tract extended from Germantown avenue westward to the old township road, known in history as the Reading road, and now from Twenty-third and Venango streets to Wissahickon avenue. The old road south of Venango street having been vacated, Nicetown lane, now Hunting Park avenue, formed the northern boundary, from which the tract extended southward to Rising Sun lane. The district subsequently became known as the Kenderton Farm and was owned by the late Kenderton Smith.

In 1824 the Philadelphia, Germantown and Norristown Railroad was opened to travel and a station without a ticket or baggage agent was located along the
