Midway Lane Fete Proves Most Unique and Successful-Junior League to Give Luncheon for New Members Next Month, Says Nancy Wynne

THE little village called Midway Lane, which stretched from Wayne avenue our forks with the tall and use to Green street on School House lane in" our forks with our right hand." Some tractive thing I ever saw off the stage. At both ends of the street there were tollgates, presided over by Marjorie Taylor and her committee of girls in white with nule black-and-white hats and big pockets of black-and-white striped ribbon. As you pushed your way through the crowd mu arrived first at a table where dainty bags and many colored sweaters were being sold. Across the way was a cretonne both, and the yard of Doctor Perry's house was a tea , arden with the most fascinating little tea house, doors, windows and everything. Back of the house was the circus, and, to judge from some of the fantastically dressed people I saw coming away at the end of the afternoon, that must have been some circus. Margaret La Rue looked stunning in spanish costume, walking around selling ber wares. Billie Brockie was sitting back of a table knitting most industriously, looking up now and then to remark persuasively, "Buy your Liberty Bonds!" and I heard today that about 11000 worth of Liberty Bonds were sold. The Parcel Postoffice did a rushing busi-There is an awful fascination Dest. about the mystery of a sealed package. One customer, a man, took five chances, hoping to get something that a man wouldn't be ashamed to carry home. The thing he declared would be the last was a little vase with white roses on it. So he naw something that looked like a pen-

melling salts! Mrs. Churchill Williams seemed to be buying everything in sight as I passed her at a cretonne booth. The house where the lingerie was sold was the dearest thing, with a tiny window open to show a flower pot on the window sill. Everybody said the hot waffles, which were sold at a tent in the grounds of the Greystone, were delicious; but I was so interested in the flower and vegetable markets on the opposite side of the street that I didn't have time to try them. Mrs. Fred Dunn seemed to be very busy there, and Mrs. Joe Brown and her sister-in-law. Mrs. Billy Harmar, were also selling mer-

Jo Reeves was walking up and down the lane in a most becoming green sweater, collecting subscriptions for magazines, which, according to the sign on one of the two sailors who accompanled her, will be sent to "the boys at the front." There was a lot more that I could tell about, but it was all so intersting that I haven't room enough to my all I want to about it. Anyhow, I now it was a great success.

HEAR the members of the Junior League are already planning their program for the year. The league is quite ome institution, it seems, and the members really do splendid creative work. The organization is composed of about 100 girls of the most prominent families in the city.

The league over since its inception in this city some three years ago has been the goal of the younger girls immediately fter making their debut, and although to definite work is expected from the butante her first year out, she must ave made her debut to be eligible.

However, on account of the postpone-to Green street on Schould than the most at-Germantown, yesterday, was the most at-idea that, ch wot? NANCY WYNNE.

SOUTHERN ORATOR IN YANKEE TOWN

How the Civil War Might Have Been Avoided. How to Keep Enemy From "Landing on Us." Tioga Engagements Announced

WHEN McKinley was President of the United States he thought that the North and South could be brought closer together and kindler feelings generated by having Southern orators come North and the Northern men go South for Fourth of July celebrations. One of the Souther speakers, who was assigned to address a town meeting in Massachusetts, was met at the station by a typical Yankee, and was asked. "Be you the Independence Day orator" Replying in the affirmative he climbed into the old-fashioned corriage.
