The shaded portion of the map indicates the sweep of General Haig's army. Among the more important villages wrested from the Germans are Havrin-court and Marcoing, also shown. NO ARTILLERY PREPARATION

There was no artillery preparation. The lumbering tanks did the pulverizing of the way. They blazed the trail, their gigantically ponderous paths offering free entrance to the infantry immediately behind. They crashed over wire entanglements, over artfully concealed chevaux do frise, over trenches themselves and the walking Tommies followed.

Prisoners pouring back of the lines today were still dazed with the surprise of

They were utterly flabbergasted. Not an officer or man had the slightest idea the British could possibly strike on their quiet sector at a time when it was supposed every ounce of Britain's strength was concentrated in Flanders.

Since the battle of Arras the Cambral sector has dozed in peace and quiet. The line seemed impregnable. The Germans had heard that so often they were certain of it. They were confident that it would take weeks of high explosive shell preparation and wire-cutting expeditions, as well as unprecedented barrages, to do

BOCHES CAUGHT NAPPING.

So they dozed and slept and took life easy in the German lines. There was virtually no artiflery fire felt from the British side-the "Englische Schweine" were too busy with their concentrated guns at Passchendaele and, besides, they didn't have enough guns to concentrate-so why worry? That must have been the German psychology.

same sleekly confident Boches as they crawled from their dugouts, sleep barely out of their eyes, at the sound of crunching, lumbering juggernauts above them-to find British soldiers swarming everywhere. They raised their arms in shrilling cries of "Kamerad!" and fled hither and thither dazed and terror-stricken Guns that never fired a shot in this battle were seized by the Tommics or else crushed into the yielding earth by the steely weight of the tanks.

Cement emplacements, steel-bound roofs of dugouts crunched in, burying Germans like ants in hills trodden underloot.

All of the stereotyped rules of preparation for war and of actual battle strategy itself were thrown aside in the British coup.

The greatest surprise stroke of the war, one of the greatest single strategic achievements of the entire struggle and possibly the start of a victory equal in importance to the Marne, is Field Marshal Haig's breaking of the Hindenburg line reported teday.

Haig's troops are now literally on the threshold of Cambrai, the vital spot in the German communication's line.

That Haig should have been able to mass sufficient troops and material before this German front to break the Hindenburg line at various points—even to sweep over porat various points—even to sweep over por-tions of the second-line defenses—without the enemy being aware of it, is almost a new achievement in the great war.

NOTE—In the following remarkable interview setting forth British labor war aims, Arthur Henderson, former Labor member of the Lloyd George Cabinet and spokesman for British trades unionism, emphasized a point generally overlooked in this country, He reveals the importance attaching in Europe to the secondary offensive—the political offensive—launched by President Wilson against Hohenzollern. by President Wilson against Hohenzollern-ism in his war declaration speech. ### American International Shipbuilding Corporation

U. S. Government Shipbuilders

Over 100,000 additional shipbuilders are necessary to carry out Our Country's splendid shipbuilding program. Every skilled workman who can use tools and is not fighting should be in the Nation's Shipyards. Every partially skilled or unskilled workman should take advantage of this opportunity to become an Expert

We need thousands of skilled men in shipyard trades and skilled workmen in allied trades, and we also want entirely unskilled men who wish to learn a profitable trade, earning good wages while they are learning. No previous shipbuilding experience is necessary. Mechanical training is, however,

The training will be intensive and will extend from a few days up to six weeks, depending upon previous training and

Unskilled men while being trained as riveters, reamers, chippers, caulkers, erectors, riggers, shipfitters, etc., will be paid 30 cents an hour while learning. They have the certain prospect of advancement as soon as they have mastered these trades. The Hog Island Shipbuilding School is the shortest road to skilled workers' high wages.

Hog Island Shipyard borders on the Philadelphia city line and can be reached from practically every point in Philadelphia in from 30 to 60 minutes, by train, trolley or boat. Working con-ditions are pleasant and safe.
