SAMMEES TO OPEN CLUB

Home Comforts at Reasonable Prices to Be Provided for Men of U. S. A.

By HENRI BAZIN

Staff Correspondent of the Evening Ledger with the American Army in France

AMERICAN FIELD HEADQUARTERS IN FRANCE, Oct. 24.

A certain French division aiding in training the first contingent of Sammees publishes a newspaper of its own. It is a four-page affair entitled "Le Diable au Cor," meaning, in as full a translation as possible, The Devil's Horn. It is supposed to be published daily, but often the editors and make-up men are busy at more serious work so that, now and then, a few days pass without an issue.

Recent numbers have had articles in English, always in prose. Since the Frenchman is essentially a poet, there is very often something in the form of French verse. In a recent issue appears a poem of six stanzas dedicated "Aux soldats Americains," "to American soldiers." I have taken the first and last and put them into rhymed English. The swing is not as stirring as in French, but the sentiment, the really essential, remains:

"Hail comrades! When you march along,
You of the great inheritance,
We seem to hear another song,
Arising from the fields of France:
The music of our father's feet
Who followed Lafayette's high trail,
When liberty was in retreat;
Good comrades, hail!

"Hail comrades! When at last appears
The dawn of triumph in the sky,
Then you that now a hundred years
And forty had us for ally,
You shall in this, a sacred place
From which you made the Boche turn tail,
Receive our brothers' embrace,
Hail, comrades! Hail."

In the ancient town, where correspondents are quartered, we of the typewriter were the first in khaki to enter, a little less than three months ago. We were the objective of all eyes, and our uniforms, particularly our campaign hats, the source of gossip and wonder. That is now of the past, since the Sammee in his khaki is all over the place.

EVEN BARNS ARE POPULATED

Accommodations in this town are meager, because in piping times of peace half a dozen travelers at the one hotel make a crowd. Now everybody's spare room is filled, and everybody's barn also. With the influx of American officers, the matter of a service club was recently discussed, and the idea met with enthusiastic approval from the French officers attached to a training division.

The result is the Lafayette Club, that throws open its doors in a few days. It is situated in a delightful old building that has been an Adrian barracks upon the main street. The buildings are almost as old as the town, are in the form of a quadrangle, and have been thoroughly renovated and painted. There will be a cafe, a mess hall, a reading room with papers and magazines in French and English, a writing room, several really truly bathrooms, a luxury heretofore nonexistent in this rural section of France, and a number of bedrooms for transient officers. The whole is being furnished anew, and to be electrically lighted. Upon the opening night a vaudeville and stunt night is announced and it is whispered that a lot of hidden talent among the khaki-clad army of the United States will make their foreign debut.

There is to be but one class of membership, and that active. There is to be no initiation fee, but monthly dues amounting to one per cent of officers' pay and allowances. Civilians resident in the town and adjoining sections, as well as others attached to the army in any official capacity, are eligible for membership. In this class come accredited correspondents. The dues for this type of membership are $3 a month. Every service received in the club is to be paid for at the time rendered, since the working capital is as yet small. Club membership will be shown by card.

The Lafayette Club, the first in France of purely American origin, is destined to cement the friendship between American and French officers, and to fill a niche in the lives of those far from home that will also do much to strengthen mutual t.es.

NOVELTY IN FRENCH BANDS

Every band attached to a French regiment has in addition to specified military band instrments, a "fanfare" of trumpets. These take up the refrain at stated intervals while the rest of the band remains silent; and they begin with an indescribable flourish of their instruments, raising them to the lip with a quick concerted movement and lowering them to the side in equal rhythm as the band proper takes up the air.

With the single exception of the marines, no American army or navy band follows this custom, one full of interest quite apart from the music itself. The other day I happened into the marine camp where the colonel and the three majors of a certain regiment are my friends. Just as I arrived the band was beginning the usual afternoon concert in the public square of the town.

The trumpeters stood rigidly as if on parade, their trumpets at their sides. And from each hung a small square fanion, upon which were embroidered the colors of the regiment. With the trumpets at the lip, these fanions hung straight and almost rigid as the musicians played. And then in the flourish that I have not described because it is quite indescribable, they hung limp as the instruments were brought down in quick movement, while the music continued from the band proper.

"Why, that's a French stunt you have copied, isn't it, major?" I said to an officer.

"French stunt nothing!" he replied. "We did that years ago in this outfit! We are the only branch of American military service that did it long before this war, and that continues it still. I have been kept busy explaining that fact to a number of French officers and people who have expressed surprise at the knowledge. I have told them never to be surprised at the marines, who have enviable records in many a little fight under our flag, and who are keen to show their caliber over here. They and all of us are just itching for the chance, and we hope it's coming soon."
