

The War Opens New Spheres to Women Workers

Woman Worker Who Efficiently "Mans" a Threading Machine at the Pennsylvania Railroad's Car Repair Shops, at Forty-fourth Street and Parkside Avenue

When Enlistments and the Draft Raided the Male Working Force at the Pennsylvania's Repair Shops Here, Women Were Placed at the Machines With Satisfactory Results.

Women Letter Carriers Are Now Tooting Their Whistles in New York. They Are Paid Thirty-five Cents an Hour for an Eight-Hour Day.
Western Newspaper Union

The Grave Responsibility of a Switch Operator Fails to Perturb This Woman Worker at the Westmoreland Station of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

A Woman Painter Employed at the Pennsylvania Railroad's Car Repair Shops Freshening Up the Inside of One of the Buildings.

Eighteen-Year-Old Janitress of the Wheat Sheaf School, Bustleton, Who Says She Likes "Real Work Better Than Handling China in a Department Store."

First Class of Girls to Receive Instruction in Manual Training at the Frankford High School Displaying a Few Specimens of Their Handiwork.

And Now We Have the First Lady Floorwalker! These Attractive Young Women, Attired in Uniforms of Khaki, Have Made Their Appearance at Lit Brothers'