It was interesting to take a census among college graduates to learn how high the percentage of those ignorant of this appalling episode in modern history may be. We fancy it would be about 90 per cent. 'One Million Dead in Famine' in India or China is a headline that has been too often in small type in our newspapers. A glance at the brief calendar and we turned to more engrossing topics of the day's news!

It is about time to become internationalized and shake off provincialism. The initial step costs $1, payable at any Red Cross station.

It is a new thing under the sun to have advance news of a campaign. But Germany could not keep it secret if she wanted to. It is inevitable. The last campaign of the war is about to start, for the simple reason that there is no other place but the western front left for sustained operations.

PENNYPACKER AUTOBIOGRAPHY

When Judge Pennypacker Returned From Europe He Found Several Important Cases Waiting for Him to Give a Decision Upon

(Copyright, 1917, by the Public Ledger Company.)

CHAPTER IX—CONTINUED WE CROSSED the ocean from Southampton to New York in the City of Paris. On board were Pillsbury, who had been Attorney General of Massachusetts; Rufus E. Shapley, the Philadelphia lawyer who wrote 'Solid for Mulhooly,' and the secretary of Chauncey M. Depew. We started in a storm so fierce that the seas swept over the upper decks and the hatchway had to be closed and the passengers locked below, much to their discomfort.

When I went to Europe at the beginning of the summer vacation all of the matters before the court had been disposed of, except one, and upon that we had reached a conclusion, and Stalberger and Wittbank promised that one of them would write the opinion. The Christian Science Church had applied for a charter. In addition to teaching certain theological tenets they proposed to treat diseases through the instrumentality of 'healers' who charged a fee for their services and advertised, seeking money. After discussion all of the three judges were opposed to granting the charter for the reason that it would be in conflict with those statutes which make it a criminal offense to practice medicine except after study and upon a certificate of the Board of Examiners. We determined to reject some good lawyer, disinclined to overlook the technique of his profession, a little set and narrow, closely associated with some one of the orthodox churches, so as to refer the case to him as master. We all felt sure that Henry Budd was our man and we made the reference. After long and careful study and a full presentation of the testimony he filed a thoroughgoing report recommending that the charter be granted. Then there was a court in trouble. When I returned in the fall I found the case just where it had been left. Stalberger protesting that, since he was a Jew, if he had written the opinion it would have been commenced upon unfavorably, and Wittbank, since he was known as a strict churchman, urging similar reasons. The matter ended in my writing an opinion overruling Budd and refusing the charter, and by such a series of mischances I secured a place in Christian Science literature. With the great growth in numbers of these people and with the respectability which comes in two or three generations after the accumulation of such fortunes as that of Mrs. Eddy, there promises to be a future in which I shall be regarded as a sort of nineteenth-century Herod.

Tom Daly's Column

TO THE CHRISTMAS TURKEY Oh, esculent morsel delicious, All garnished with marjoram and clove, What more could the epicure wish us To bring from the warm Christmas stove?

Our pleasure is born of your sorrow, A martyr are you to our greed, Your bones will be white on the morrow— There are many to feed.

You rambled at will o'er the meadows While spring, summer and autumn passed by, And few were the clouds or the shadows To dim the bright blue of your sky.

You thrived and grew fatter and fatter, Till you were a king-bird, indeed, We welcome you now to our platter— There are many to feed.

And all your fat sisters and brothers Rich cause for rare feasting will be On the opulent tables of others No whit more desiring than we; For little, oh, little of pity Have we for our neighbors in need, Where, caught in the slums of the city, There are many to feed.

Then all who have good Christmas dinners Praise God, who is bounteous indeed; Here's food for thought, too, for all sinners— There are many to feed.

CHRISTMAS ALL ROUND THE CALENDAR

THERE is no month of the year to which respectable authorities have not assigned the birth of Christ. The word Christmas was not used until 1628. But there are chronological theories which place the date in each year from 8 to 2 B. C. The difficulty arises from the uncertainty of the references in the New Testament record. If the vital statistics of Bethlehem were preserved or if the records of the temple in Jerusalem were not destroyed, it might be possible to establish the date beyond dispute, for the Jews had a careful system of keeping family records.

The babies were subjected to certain ceremonial observances at a fixed age, and there is every reason for believing that records were kept.

The critical date on which everything depends is that of the census which occurred at about the time of the birth. Authorities disagree on what census is meant, for there were supposed to be two, separated by a period of years. Dionysius the Little fixed the date of the Christian era as 754 after the founding of Rome. He did this on the sixth century. But scholars refuse to accept this calculation as accurate. Herod was dead in 754 A. U. C. and according to the New Testament he was ruling at the time of the birth in Bethlehem. Chronology in the fourth century, was so fixed that December 7 was the correct day of the year, for he said in a sermon that the rapidly miraculous diffusion of the celebration of the anniversary on that date was proof that the date was correct. He said further that the census papers of the Holy Family were in Rome, where they could be examined by the skeptical. Christendom has accepted the date, and it is difficult to observe it even though research should prove it wrong.
