ANNA MOORE

Nineteen eighteen is now in our midst. He, she or it, whichever you prefer to call the victor arrived on the tick of the clock at midnight last night, and few did not serve to make it reasonable to suppose that everybody was pleased at the event.

The fact that the country is plunged deep in the bloodiest war of all history, that the city is shivering and shivering in an unprecedented cold wave, that coal is in the class with diamonds and other precious jewels and that Hoover is looking on every eye you put an extra spoonful of sugar in your coffee did not serve to dampen the ardor of Philadelphians in giving a right royal welcome to the newest of strangers.

The gang was all here, and we said "Hi, Hi!" and with that hope which springs eternal in the human breast we all started in on the new year. Even the imminence of national prohibition did not serve to put the brakes on the general joy that reigned throughout the city. The gang was all here, and everybody hoped for the best.

He's danced, whistles blew and everybody was gay. Cafes were filled with laughing, jolly and people were a jolly lot. While there was a fog of administration and that fog will win the war, they remembered only that food, with a little something on the side, will go a long way toward giving a good start to a happy and prosperous New Year.

Out on the streets the small boy and his irrepressible tin horn were not deterred to any marked extent by the cold weather, and the din that came from their source in the early part of the evening contributed substantially to the atmosphere of gaiety and abandon that marked the evening.

Hotels and cafes did a lively business until the tiny hours of the morning and the gentlemanly gentlemen in the white apron who entered to the wants of the convivially inclined sunk down in a chair after it was all over and gave utterance to a silent prayer and a jargon of thanksgiving that New Year comes not more often than once a year. Altogether it was a lovely evening.

The center of New Year gaiety was at the Bellevue-Stratford, where both persons celebrated. Five large dining rooms, including the ballroom, had been specially prepared for the occasion and all were filled to overflowing. An attractive program had been arranged and a special event of the evening, giving off 12 the lights were lowered, and as they were turned on again a picturesque figure of Father Time tottered through the rooms and pronounced a benediction on the New Year.

In nearly all the churches special watch-light services were held, and the welcome to the new year had a religious as well as a convivial aspect. "The

COLD WAVE IS PASSING; SNOW PROMISED TODAY

Temperature Gradually Moderating, Bringing Relief From Suffering

The worst of the cold spell is over. The weather is not yet what the average citizen would like it to be, but gradually rising temperature gives promise that by the end of today something approaching normal winter weather will be here.

The coal shortage, combined with transportation difficulties which made deliveries of coal impossible, has served to prolong the suffering and inconvenience due to the bitter cold wave, but the railroads hold out the prospect of increased shipments today and it is likely that by tomorrow the average Philadelphian will be about in the same position as regards cold weather, that he was in before the sudden drop in temperature last Friday night.

The Delaware River is frozen almost to its mouth, except where the city ice boats keep the channel open, and the Schuylkill is almost a solid cake of ice. On the lakes in the parks and the outlying sections of the city the skating is excellent and thousands of persons yesterday took advantage of ice conditions to enjoy this sport.

shortage of coal, which made it expensive as well as precarious to keep lights burning at too late an hour, was the only thing that threw a damper on the observance of the annual celebration.

There were aching heads and drowsy eyes when people went to work this morning, but everybody was glad that the new year had started, and New Year's resolutions were made in abundance and then everybody settled down and went to work just like it was still last year.

 motive works, which probably is handling more war contracts than any other similar organization in the country. This busy hive of industry with its thousands of workmen shut down completely yesterday morning, not resume again until tomorrow.

Alba E. Johnson, president of Baldwin's, said there was nothing unusual in the closing of the plant and that the coal famine had nothing to do with the suspension of business.

The first instance of diversion of fuel for the management of the railroad, a charitable institution actually enduring privation sent three carloads to the Pennsylvania Institute for the Deaf and Dumb at Mount Airy.

Authority to take such drastic steps for the relief of suffering was conferred upon the state administrators by Governor Pennock on Saturday.

Coal officers throughout the city were jammed by consumers who desired to take advantage of the last day during which the comparatively cheap coal would be available. At one of the biggest places a large force of extra clerks was required to tabulate the orders for coal that kept flooding the office.

Some relief may be brought to Philadelphia by William A. McAadoo, director general of railroads, who is taking steps in Washington to relieve the coal shortage of the nation by speeding up all rail shipments.

Dr. Harry A. Garfield telegraphed New Year's greetings and appreciation of support to William Potter, State fuel administrator, last night.

"I am confident," he added, "that with patient courage and united support we will be able to achieve results which will be of great value to our country in the coal crisis."

French Ront Foe on Italian Line

The center of a conflagration which lighted the countryside for miles.

The fire started from incendiary bombs dropped by enemy airplanes. The dome of the massive church burned through the night, making a majestic spectacle, but the solidity of the ancient walls, dating from 1250, and the copper roof saved the main structure and roof from destruction. The bomb hit the outer edge of the dome, which was a fiery column, rising 150 feet in the center of the city.

One building was pierced from top to bottom and torn to pieces by a bomb which buried four persons, three of whom were children. The Church of San Valentino and the ancient palace were hit and partly wrecked. Other private buildings also were struck.

The rescues saved were "The Meeting of St. John and Anna," by Titian, and "The Birth of Christ" and "The Adoration of the Magi," by Campagna.

WAR BOARD QUILTS JOB

McAadoo Names Hale Holden
as Member of Advisory Council

WASHINGTON, Jan. 1.
The Railroads War Board, organized April 11 to co-ordinate the transportation services of the country in the behalf of the Government, has gone out of existence. Its offer to effect itself was accepted by William G. McAadoo, director general of railroads. Mr. McAadoo, as another step in the organization of his own staff for the management of the railroads, chose Hale Holden, president of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad, as a member of his new advisory board and placed him in charge of the various subcommittees of the American Railway Association's special committee on national defense, together with the office files and accumulated information. Mr. Holden has been a member of the Railroads War Board.

The director general announced that until his final organization shall be made he has constituted the following advisory board: the director general, Mr. Holden, John Skelton Williams, Comptroller of the Currency; Henry Walters, chairman of the board of Atlantic Coast Line and Louisville and Nashville Railroad; Edward Chambers, transportation director of the food administration, and Walker D. Hines, assistant to the director general.

Joseph W. Folk, chief counsel of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and John Barton Payne, counsel for the Shipping Board, who has been retained by Mr. McAadoo as legal adviser, will have charge of most legal questions arising under Government operation of railroads.

The Railroads' War Board gave out a final statement, in the form of a report to the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee, attributing recent congestion to the overwhelming amount of freight dumped upon the carriers by war industrial activities.

"The railroads had already co-ordinated their activities before their taking over by the Government," said the statement, "and for eight months have been operated as a unified continental system. The increase alone in traffic handled by the railroads in 1917 as compared with that of two years ago has been more than 135,000,000 tons combined total traffic for a year of the miles, or substantially equal to the railroads of Canada, Germany, Great Britain, Russia, France and Austria. In the first six months after we entered the war the railroads handled as much freight traffic as they did in the entire year 1906."

Speculators Promise Full Plans to Build in Philadelphia
The new train announcements announced by the Reading are:
The Government has urged that the Government should have the right of eminent domain for the 5000 or more acres for Hog Island.
This plan to forestall the Government's plan to take the land for the use of the Government, is believed to be taking ground there, planning the use of the money if the Government should build a housing project.
