...LEY LINE ...LLY DEFICIENT

...Service to Patrons a Trial Fraught With Great Discomfort

...T PREFER WALKING

...Insufficient in Number, Uncomfortable and in State of Dilapidation

...a song of trolley cars, Sixtieth street and Seventh, ... and twenty neighborhoods scattered ... along their path, ... when this wrath is opened and the vic... start to cuss. ... 'tis a proper time to straighten ... out this muse.

This mildly militant jingle is offered ... bedtime lullaby to all fond parents, ... parents, who must use the ... street cross-town line. An ... PUBLIC LEDGER reporter ob... a transfer for this line at Sixtieth and Market streets, laboring under the impression that the transfer possessed a certain potential value.

It was 5:30 in the afternoon when the reporter left an elevated train and descended the steps with his transfer. The rush hour was on, and elevated trains were arriving at one minute and a half intervals, scores of passengers alighting at Sixtieth street from each train. Hundreds were receiving transfers and hurrying to the street to complete their journey home.

Standing on the wind-swept corners below were hundreds of belated passengers shivering in the cold, waiting their chance to use these transfers and reach their firesides. The reporter joined the throng. Many who had only a mile or less to go and who were deeper in Sixtieth street lore than he scanned the horizon for a moment and walked their weary way.

INADEQUATE SERVICE

In about twenty minutes a car loomed up and stopped at Market street. The crowd surged toward it. Now, a trolley built to carry not more than ninety passengers uncomfortably finds itself in a very embarrassing predicament when several hundred wish to board it at the same time. It was discouraging business, but the reporter managed to get aboard the third car which limped up, exactly thirty-five minutes after alighting from the elevated train.

Once aboard, he asked a fellow sufferer, who had successfully fought his way to standing space on the same car, whether this was an unusual condition of affairs.

"Unusual," replied the man, with a look of mingled surprise and resignation, "you evidently are a stranger in this neighborhood. This is what I have to contend with twice a day, and it does seem that something must be done to relieve the situation."

"These are wartimes, and we are having very extreme weather," suggested the reporter.

"That is all very well, but a well-managed public service corporation should be able to meet unusual conditions," answered this obviously intelligent American working man, "and if they cannot rise to the occasion, they should ask for the proper co-operation from those who have the ability to meet such emergencies.

"I read in the papers that the Philadelphia Rapid Transit Company is short of men to man its cars on account of sickness. No wonder the men are sick. The cars are not heated, and the doors won't close properly. No wonder the men break down. You would be sick, too, if you had to work under such conditions."

The reporter told this passenger that if this was the usual condition of the cars and that if what he was experiencing was a fair sample of cross-town service he certainly must admit his premise.

"Catharine street," called the conductor, his teeth chattering, and the reporter said "good-by" and better luck," and made his way to Sixty-second street.

JUST AS BAD IN THE MORNING

Before leaving to return to the heart of the city he was told by the owner of the house where he called, a most reliable individual, that the service which he had encountered was of the same character in the morning, when the service was most important.

"I have walked to Market street every morning for a week," he said. "I have to be downtown to business by 8 o'clock, and of late I have given up depending on the surface cars. I can make better time on foot."

Returning to the corner of Sixtieth and Catharine the reporter waited more than twenty minutes for a car to return to Market street. Then four came in a group and he boarded the first. It was unheated and sadly in need of repairs. As it limped along (the word is used advisedly) he again engaged a daily rider in conversation.

"Conditions on this line are abominable," echoed this passenger. "Here is one of the greatest feeding lines in the city and one which is called upon to serve an enormous number of people, and yet they keep on these old yellow cars, and not half enough of those to meet the traffic requirements.

"The conductors and motormer, admit that the company has not enough cars, and say that they cannot get mechanics to keep them in shape, as the wages they pay are so far below what the poorest mechanic can get at other work. Even the cars that they do keep running on the line don't always stop for you when you signal, and you have to wait in the cold for several more minutes."

Something like the train that Alexander waited for in McIntire and Heath's sketch, the 'Ham Tree,'" interjected the reporter. "It not only didn't stop; it never even hesitated."

NOT MUCH HUMOR IN IT

"I suppose you can get humor out of almost everything, but I tell you frankly you would see no humor in it if you had to use this line every day. There is little mirth to be had standing on cold corners waiting for cars which don't come, and which if they do come are colder inside than all out-of-doors."

"I am a newspaper man," modestly interposed the reporter. "Perhaps a story setting forth in a plain statement of facts just what I have seen and heard today would do some good."

"I hope so, and I think every man, woman and child that uses this line between Woodland avenue and Overbrook will be grateful for your effort."

And so the reporter has written a plain statement of facts.

EXIT "PEANUT JAKE"; LANSDALE LANDMARK

Curio Collector and "Human Thermometer" Retires After Forty Years

LANSDALE, Pa., Jan. 9.

After selling more than 10,000 bushels of peanuts at a nickel a bag and amassing a small fortune in rare paper money and coins, "Peanut Jake" Fretz, familiar to thousands of travelers and hundreds of others who have attended public sales in Montgomery and Bucks counties in the last forty years, has retired from business because of ill health.

"Jake's" tiny stand, near the trolley depot here, is to let, and trolley travelers, who have come to regard him as a landmark, will miss the eccentric old purveyor of peanuts.

"Jake" has long had a passion for curios, old coins and bills, antique furniture and strange buttons. These he has picked up from time to time at public auctions and elsewhere, and once they have fallen into his hands they have stuck. For "Jake" was always ready to buy, but seldom could be induced to part with any of his treasures.

Now, at seventy-two, he finds he has a collection of money alone which, collectors say, will bring him no less than $5000, though it is doubtful if he would part with it for $6000.

He has a room filled with old clocks of every conceivable size and shape, all picked up "right" at sales, where he peddled peanuts and "kept his eyes open."

One of the rules of his life was instilled into his mind by his mother, and he has turned it to profit. That rule is "Appear as dumb as you can, but don't let anybody play you for half as dumb as you appear."

"Peanut Jake" also is known locally as "the Human Thermometer," because the temperature in winter can always be determined by his garb. On warm days he wears two flannel shirts and two pairs of pants—"Jake" does not care for the new-fangled idea of calling them trousers—and in weather like that which opened the new year he will be found warm and happy with his body swathed in no less than a half dozen of each garment.

MATINEE MUSICAL PAYS TRIBUTE TO MACDOWELL

Program Devoted to Works of American Composer Marks First 1918 Concert

The Matinee Musical Club resumed the series of fortnightly concerts comprising its "All American year" in the rose garden of the Bellevue-Stratford with a program devoted entirely to the works of America's most original and probably most notable composer. The dward MacDowell program, which ushered in 1918 activities for this organization made up of women musicians and music lovers of Philadelphia, found a large assembly of them eager to participate again in the Matinee Musical's melodic treats after the Christmas and New Year's recesses, since these holidays fell on club meeting days.

The very excellently chosen and allotted program was arranged and conducted by Mrs. Charles C. Collins and Mrs. Camille Zeckwer, and reflected great credit on them and on the artists who participated.

Mary Brooks Thompson, Loretta L. Strehl, Dorothy Wolff and Augusta K. McCoy, with Emily Fricke Lesher at the piano, began the concert with the quartet "Summer Wind." Elma Carey Johnson, soprano, with Frances L. Butterworth at the piano, sang "To a Wild Rose" and "The Blue Bell," and Augustine Houghton, mezzo soprano, with Helen Bothroyd at the piano, and Mary Newkirke, contralto, accompanied by Ray Daniels Jones, also offered vocal numbers.

Effie Leland Golz, violinist, accompanied by Isabel Ferris, pianist, gave two solos, and Mary Miller Mount, the well-known pianist, played three solos. The Indian suite was played by an orchestra composed of members, under the direction of Nina Prettyman Howell.

Stereopticon views of Peterborough and the Peterborough Pageant, with pageant music, were shown. Ralph Kinder directed the community song, arranged by him, "Battle Hymn of the Republic," which was the concluding feature of the program.

Music from the "New England Idyls" and the "Woodland Sketches" formed the major part of the program.

Mrs. MacDowell was the guest of the club and explained the views of Peterborough, N. H., the MacDowell shrine and of the pageant held there.

CALIFORNIA BREAKS FEEDING RECORDS

A world's record is claimed for California in the volume of fruit and perishable food products which she is putting into the maw of a hungry sphere.

In a statement issued by the Southern Pacific Company an announcement is made that in a period of ninety days the Pacific Fruit Express has carried 27,000 cars of fruit and other perishables out of California for the East. This sets an average for the three months of 300 cars a day, a volume of traffic of this character never equaled anywhere.—Los Angeles Times.
