White Elephant Sale Opens Today in Penfield Building-Colonel Rolfe Presented Colors to Captain Elwyn, of Motor Messenger Service

THE White Elephant Sale, in other pects to leave shortly for the flying school words, the Jumble Sale at the Penfield at Texas, uilding, will take place today, tomorrow and Saturday, and great will be the profits therof, say I, if one may judge from the articles which have been collected in the last few days. I told you something of it a few days ago, so I won't ", into detail except to say that they really have got some worth-while things there and sometimes, you know, one man's white elephant is another man's dearest pet, so there will be bargains, my dears; there certainly will be.

STOPPED in at the Bellevue for tea on Tuesday afternoon, and you never saw so many motor messengers in your life as were fixing their hair and powdering their small noses and rushing around generally. Naturally, one wondered what it was all about, as one does not often see so many together except on drill days, and so I asked what was going on and found that they had had a meeting there and that Colonel Rolfe, U. S. A., had presented the captain, Mrs. Thomas Elwyn, with the colors in the presence of Brigadier General Waller and several others, and that the ceremony had been a surprise to the captain, and it was all very wonderful. So it was! Those women do a wonderful work and very few of us realize it or know about it. They have been drilling once a week under a sergeant from the marine corps and now General Piersol is giving them a litter drill, as when the time comes for the wounded to arrive in this country these women will run their ambulances and carry the men to the base hospitals designated. It's a well-systematized, splendid work, and entirely independent of all it co-operates with. And it co-operates with every known association under the sun and has direct communication with Washington. Believe me those women are working!

DID you know that a number of girls from town and the Main Line have formed a class together and are studying pursing at Gynecean Hospital, at 247 North Eighteenth street. They have taken the work up in dead earnest and go there four days a week. Among them are Sarah Penrose, Frances Sullivan, Margaret and Hannah Wright and Clyde Brodhead. It seems to me a very sensible thing to do, for if the war does not end soon there will be great, and more than great, need of nurses and assistant nurses in this country as well as in England and France.

COTTHE country's call has been heard and Answered in this house." That it the message the Service Flag tells us as it bravely flaunts its stars from nearly every window; and every wife and mother feels a thrill of pride as she counts her own particular stars. Even the children have learned its meaning, and, as is their way, compare notes.

Little Cynthia looked with pride at the blue star that hung in their window, for while she shed a few quiet tears when she remembered the day Big Brother had sailed away to help the poor French people, she was proud of him as only a little sister can be proud. He was her hero, and therefore it was hard to have only a star to show when Mary, who lived access the street, had a tall brother who wore spurs and had a sword and who wasn't so far away that he couldn't spare a few hours to come and

But Cynthia was a brave little thing. While she did not understand it at all, she was silent, and reverenced her blue star all to herself. And then, oh, then, one morning she awoke to find a blue star in Mary's window two. And there was Mary's hig brother looking particularly hero-like. In her small mind this was not fair, and to a child unfairness is the last straw.

She knew what she would do now! Taking a sheet of paper and a pencil she seated herself at a low table and began to write carefully and painstakingly, as well as painfully, her little face flushed and her small hand trembling.

"Dear Mr. Wilson-My Big Brother has gone to France to fight, and we have a blue star for him. Mary's brother is still here, but they have a star for him too. Please make our star a shooting star,

"CYNTHIA." She sealed the letter with much pride, but although she felt a little awestruck one thing more remained to be done-to and out Mr. Wilson's address.

A knock at his door brought Daddy, who, being everything the name implies, did not seem at all surprised at her request and asked no questions. But Cynthia's nerves were on edge, and, when the letter had been duly addressed, the tears would not stay back any longer, and, putting her head on Daddy's shoulder, she told him every

And because he was the right sort of a "Daddy" he told her things that made her feel much happier and explained to her that Mary's brother would have to cross an ocean filled with wicked submarines, while her Big Brother was already safe in France, and he did not tell her of the dreadful war dangers on land for Big Brother, the little heart was too torn yet, and he didn't laugh a bit at her letter to Mr. Wilson, but went with her while she put it into the letterbox. UNIQUE DECORATIONS AT PRETTY DINNER

Table Arranged to Represent Western Valley, With Desert, Hills and Railroads

An interesting entertainment given recently in California was the "camouflage" dinner given in honor of Miss Jean Miller, of San Diego, and Captain Lapham Loomis Brun-dred, U. S. A., a few nights before their doors lined the walls, overhead was suspended a huge airplane formed of crimson roses and follage, and about the room were great baskets and vases of pink rosebuds and ferns.

From this room a "first line trench" led nto the fortifications. The entire room was transformed into a wooded valley with a gigantic fort made of canvas and covered with branches of eucalyptus and other foli-age, tiny electric lights showing through the leaves to simulate the lights of the fort. As the honor guests passed through, a gun salute was fired, and from somewhere in he foliage that lined the walls an orchestra played "Over There."

The table itself was a miniature valley, vith desert hills and outlying mountains all refrectly carried out in every detail. At one end was represented Balboa Park encampment, where the young officer was sta-tioned, and the other Brundredville, which was christened "Some City Somewhere in America." In the center of the plain rose America." In the center of the plain rose the Rocky Mountains. Brundredville on one side and California on the other, the former in the heart of the desert, and California shining with all her wealth of fruit and flowers. A tiny train, presumably bearing the bridal couple, and on steel tracks ell around the circle from California to Brundredville. The tracks were bordered with pink rosebuda and foliage, siender telegraph poles carried messages of congratugraph poles carried messages of congratu-lation throughout the dinner, and tiny electric h s along the way lighted the "road to happiness." The idea was very novel and surely most attractive. Not all of the ingenuity of the occasion, however, was expended in the decoration— the menu was a continuous source of merri-ment from the first course to the last. The soup was found hidden beneath tin cans just when all of the guests were reaching the conclusion that that part of the menu had been omitted. Butter pats were successfully concealed beneath immense green bell pep-pers; lettuce heads, that looked nothing but pers; lettuce heads, that looked nothing but lettuce, concealed crab legs; saited almonds were found in walnut shells; olives were apparently growing in the heart of a tomato; tenderloin of beef was served in crab shells, and sherbet made its appearace in rosy apples. Cabbage leaves that, suggested their accompaniment of corned beef were in reality found to be merely the "camouffage" for mallard duck. Celery salad was served in carrot shells and ice cream in orange shells, while a banana, perfect from the outside, was found to be merely a container for bread rolls. Other bread rolls that seemed perfect examples of those mother used to make were found to be filled with tiny cakes, and black coffee was served in coccanut shells. The evening's entertainment was concluded by dancing.

Meeting This Morning Chestnut Hill Service House

Chestnut Hill Service House

An interesting meeting was held this morning at the Chestnut Hill Service House, at which Miss Limerick, who has charge of the classes in practical cooking, presided. The object of this meeting or "housekeeper's conference" was to discuss the economic questions which arise in large households when not only the family's, but also the servants' table must be provided for. Many helpful ideas in food conservation were brought forth. The women of Chestnut Hill have become much interested in the work Miss Limerick has done at the Service House, and many of them have been regu'ar members of her class.

PHILADELPHIA POET CHARMS SOUTHERNERS

Miss Margaret Widdemer Speaks to Meeting in Nashville, Tenn., During Tour of South

Philadelphians who know Miss Margaret Widdemer are always interested to see her poems in the various magazines and papers in which they appear. Miss Widdemer lived at one time in West Philadelphia, and although she now lives in New York she has many friends in this city who are proud of her success. Recently she spoke at a meeting in Nashville, Tenn., and gained many new friends at the tea which was given the day before the meeting. A Nashville paper has the following account of the affair:

"Previous to Miss Margaret Widdemer's apearance at the Centennial Club a limited number of Nashville people who are especially interested in things literary were invited to meet socially this distinguished member of the Poetry Society of America by Mrs. John H. Reeves, chairman of the literary department of the club, and Miss Widdemer's hostess for her siny in the city. The ac-quaintance which Mrs. Reeves's ten gave to er guests with Miss Widdemer was a deher guests with Miss Wildemer was a de-lightful prologue to an interesting following. One formed the most delightful impression of her. She is very charming in appearance and conversation. A refreshing sense of humor was quickly noted. Bearing out this fact was the instance of one of the guests relating an appropriately humorous story, which had more or less a local significance. The ready and sincere merriment in Miss Wildemer's resumsive laugh and the telling Witdemer's responsive laugh and the telling of a companion story told the tale of her native appreciation of himor. Her charac-teristic perfect naturalness which marks her writings was quite predominant in her personality, and she spoke of her writings, ambitions and purpose with a formal modesty and interest that indicated this personality. It was suggested to Miss Widdemer that one was more interested in her poetic endeavors than her press. It supposed I am' she rethan her prose. I suppose I am, she re-plied. I believe I put more of my philosophy into my poetry than I do in my prose. My novels, though, partake of the nature of a story that I myself like to read. My poetry is, however, my natural self, for it is almost entirely the product of my subconscious

"Inspired by an ardent principle or a de rispired by an artest principle of a de-sire to know further the poet's belief in woman, one caller asked her her suffrage views. She quickly replied, 'Why,' I would be surprised to know that there is any one who does not believe in the equal suffrage principles. It seems to me that it is an ac principles. It seems to me that it is an accepted question that suffrage is right; that all would believe it it, just as one would have a religion. Coming direct from New York, her home, it was an interesting reply to those who advocate the suffrage cause to hear Miss Widdemer answer the question, 'How do the women in New York feel after the suffrage victory." 'Why, we walk with our heads up, so to speak, and feel like an individual.

After leaving Nashville Miss Widdemer went on to Pulaski and Memphis, where she will speak to several women's clubs

liam Hunter, assistant financial secretary and Mr. Horace J. Heaps, treasurer With all the demands upon the time, energy and resources of every woman in the sec-tion for war relief work in some form, the donations of test garments to the Roxbor-cugh branch of the Needlework Guild of America has slightly overtopped that of any previous year. At the annual meeting 4348 garments were exhibited. Children in or-phanages need clothing, the sick and helpless in losgitude and homes must be comfortably covered and to this work very nearly 2000 garments, divided among twenty-five char-tiles, were donated by the Roxborough branch. Several hundred garments are held in reserve for the calls that are bound to come with the cold and storms. We cannot all make great gifts to our nation, but nearly
