LETTER FROM CAMP MEADE MAN TO ONE OF HIS PALS BACK HOME

Selected Man Pays High Tribute to 304th Regiment of Engineers—Little Penn Cold but Comfortable

CAMP MEADE, Md., Jan. 14. DEAR JACK—While you are celebrating countless days in Old Philly you must not forget that the weather at Camp Meade is more severe than that experienced by the boys in the trenches...

the story, but will assign our good friend, L. Adelman, of 511 Wharton street, Philadelphia, to that work. Adelman was a former newsboy in Philly, and before coming to camp was employed by the Gimbel Brothers...

Despite the cold there is no suffering, and again I must assert that the stories circulated in regard to the winter hardships at Little Penn are absurd...

Then he was made snuff sergeant for his company and is making a good record in that job. What army life means to this young man is best told by himself. He says:

It has been in the form of the dread chlorine gas infused so effectively on the western front. One battalion of men from the 315th Infantry (Philadelphia), has had the experience and beginning next week the system will be called to every battalion in the camp...

When Adelman proceeded to tell me what the Y. M. C. A. is actually doing in the educational field, and concluded his talk by saying that his contact with a dozen or more different nationalities and religions is giving him a broader viewpoint and equipping him to take a place among his men.

CAMP DIX NOT IDLE DESPITE QUARANTINE

While Medical Staff Attacks Measles Outbreak Officers and Men Study French

CAMP DIX, Wrightstown, N. J., Jan. 15. The quarantine for measles which has been put into operation here is having a twofold effect. First, it is aiding the medical men to stamp out any possible outbreak, and in the second place the officers and men are taking advantage of their enforced idleness to increase their value to the army by the study of French.

When the order for the quarantine was issued, H. A. Townsend, educational director of the Y. M. C. A., outlined a course for group classes among the officers, and the opportunity coming here of Ernest B. Millard, a lawyer of Rochester, who is well versed in the French language, fitted in nicely with his program.

Company B will stage a minstrel show next week and scores of Philadelphia are to be invited. Harry Smith, who is six feet five inches tall, and Harry Watson, who is four feet two inches, are to be a feature. Like other companies in the regiment, the officers of Company B are trained engineers.

AN ANNOUNCEMENT TO ARMY OFFICERS

SINCE September, 1917, Kirschbaum uniforms and overcoats have been available to officers of the United States Armies at prices far below the usual retail selling basis. An officer's service equipment, we have always believed, deserves to be classed, not as ordinary merchandise but as a munition of war, in the distribution of which no selfish thought, no profiteering has any place.
