order to shut down office buildings; so unless, because it is Government work, the rooms are allowed to be opened for the women to do their Red Cross dressings, etc., the day will have to be changed to Tuesday. I will certainly tell you which day it will be as soon as I hear, for none of us who go to work there and to hear these weekly talks would want to miss hearing this delightful writer tell of her experiences in France and England.

THINGS seem to be so mixed about the orders for the five days and the ten Mondays that a great many strange statements get about, and one which I happened to nail yesterday was the fact that the Alcott lunchroom, in the Sheridan Building, at Ninth and Sansom streets, would not be opened until next Wednesday. This is a mistake. It will be closed on Monday, as the Sheridan Bullding must be closed, but on Tuesday the lunchroom will be open as usual.

While on the subject of the lunchroom, did you know it is gotten up under the suspices of the Pennsylvania Association of Women Workers? They have another hinchroom in the parish house attached to Old Christ Church, on Second street, and rood is sold at both these places almost at cost. This is only one of the good works attached to this association, which also runs Whitford Lodge for the working girls In the summer time. The current events talks at the Broad Street Theatre on Wednesday mornings by Miss Janet Richards, of Washington, are held for the benefit of Whitford Lodge.

TP WAS interesting to hear yesterday of I the marriage of Ned Waln and Miss Edna Fitz-Hugh Lawrence, which took place in Washington on Thursday. Ned Waln, you know, is a brother of Mrs. Charles Custis Harrison and Mr. Jacob Waln. He married some thirty or more years ago Miss Charlotte Sharpless, who at present, with her daughter, Fannie Morris Wain, is living in Santa Barbara, Col. Mr. and Mrs. Waln separated some years ago and subsequently were divorced and Mr. Waln has been living in Virginia.

His bride is the daughter of the late George D. Lawrence, of Vicksburg, Miss., former president of the Mississippi Central Railroad, and her mother was Miss Edna Fitzhugh, of Fredericksburg, Va., whose ancestors in the year 1700 built Chatham, at Fredericksburg, one of the most beautiful places in Virginia, Mr. Waln himself is a great-grandson of Robert Morris. the financier of the Revolution.

LOVE to study people, don't you? And one of the things I love best is to hear them classify things, as it were, in their own minds. The other day I was sitting in the Bellevue-Stratford and the crowd at the front elevators was so great as to hold up the traffic, as it were. People entering the hotel had to push and shove their way through the crowds, and it was as much as your life was worth to see or recognize any one you might intend to meet. Well, as I sat there watching the crowd one woman approached the long-suffering attendant and demanded, "What's going on?" "Oh," said the long-suffering one, "there's a dog show and a wedding this afternoon."

WE HAD such a delightful little informal VV time yesterday afternoon at the Char lotte Cushman Club, despite the snow and bad weather outside. Mrs. Otis Skinner gave a little tea to the members of her husband's company and invited a few of her friends to meet them. You know, Mr. Skinner is here playing in "Mister Antonio," and Mrs. Skinner is as much interested in the work and the players as he is, though she no longer appears herself. It was just a splendid, cozy party and every one had a wonderful time,

A BRILLIANT CONCERT

Brahms Symphony Replaces Mahler Work-Thaddeus Rich an Admirable Soloist

The public has been frequently the gaine by mishaps preventing the production of movelties by the Philadelphia Orchestra. Musical experiments have been cast aside and Mr. Stokowski has gone directly to fonts of supernal beauty to find substitutions for the works originally billed. Circumstances of this kind resulted in a delightful concert at the Academy yesterday afternoon, when the Second Symphony of Brahms was given instead of the Fifth of Gustav Mahler. The Mahler composition has never been heard here. Like many modern works, its artistic rating cannot be accurately made now, Of the Brahms No. 2 no such doubts are even permissible. It is an inspired masterplece from its romantic opening notes to its apprited exuitant finale. A red allp in the program book announced that the charge had been made owing to the delay occasioned by the Orchestra being snowbound on its recent Surely this Symphony in D should answer Surely this Symphony in D should answer conclusively the shallow criticism that Brahms is dry, dull or uninclodious. Nothing in Schuman is more timely, more gracious, more simply and purifyingly lovely than the first three movements, which are almost lyric in character. The finale has the breadth and vigor of Beethoven, whose mantic of symphonic mastery unquestionably settled on Johannes Brahms. Save for an occasional roughness of the horn choirs in the last movement, the work was admirably played and Mr. Stokowski interpreted its spirit with rare sympathy.

The soloist was the Orchestra's authoritative concertmaster, Thaddeus Rich. His

His offering was a novelty, a "Poeme" for violia and orchestra by Ernest Chausson, a pupil of Cenar Franck and a composer who often reflects the great Belgian's prevailing moed of musical reflection. The work, which has much delicate beauty and is inspired by tender poetic feeling, is unusually free from violin pyrotechnics. Mr. Kich's sound accomplishments in the cantable vein were eleits in the cantabile vein were elo uently summoned and he played the haunting measures with rich beauty of tone and his familiar facile command of the mechanics his familiar facile command of the mechanics of his instrument.

The program closed with a vivid exposition of the colorful charm and the brilliant orchestration of a suite from Berlios's "Damation of Faust" that included the "Menuet des Follets," the "Danse des Sylphes" and the "Marche Hongrolee." The last named is that infectious Instrumentaf setting of the famous Rakoczy March, which disnlays Berlios's contrauntal surgenses, the setting of the famous Rakousy March, which displays Berlion's contrapuntal supremacy in dazzing style. The original basic air is still used by Austrian military bands in the present war. But as a Frenchman made the arrangement disclosed yeaterday the question of patriotic propriety hardly arises.

The "Star Spangled Banner," with which Mr. Stokowski began the concert, was given according to his new instrumentation of the anthem made recently when the director was snowbound in Kalamazoo. It combines sinantiem made recently when the director was enowbound in Kalamazoo. It combines sim-plicity and dignity with new effects of horns, drums and strings that are decidedly thrili-ing. Following the symphony Doctor Hart made an appeal for support of the Grolus-tra's Red Cross concert, which will be given in the Metropolitan Open, House on Thurs-day night of next work.
