Sensational Young Russian Violinist Shows Art of Many Phases

The violinism of Jasefia Heifetz, the youthful Russian fiddler, is not a gem of a single lustre. It has many facets, all brilliant in some way, either scintillating from perfection of technique, or mellow from fine qualities of interpretation, or classically screne and lovely from thorough grounding in the masters, or temperamental with the heady response of youth to the call of romance. And it is a musical art of the first water. That was thoroughly and thrillingly affirmed yesterday in the lad's first Philadelphia recital.

kowsky concerto with the Symphony Society of New York, under the baton of Walter Damrosch. The house was packed from pit 10 proscenium and then some, for the stage held an audience that would have been considered a Godsend by the average recitalist. Many persons were unable to gain entrance.

that would have been considered a Godsend by the average recitalist. Many persons were unable to gain entrance and the program started considerably late, owing to the congestion of music lovers determined to hear the latest marvel of the musical world.

Test of an artist's powers is absolute in a recital program. Support of an orchestra has more than once served as musical camouflage for performers who could not later emerge with glowing credit from the varied demands on mood and musicianship of a miscellaneous program. Young Heifetz not merely met the demands, but he rushed forward to encounter them more than half way. He played characteristic masters of his instrument, and he played from and the war."
