A Whole Century's Romance Plundered for a Great Motion Picture

THE world's greatest republic emerged out of all that incredible drama we call the Nineteenth Century. And it has remained for the world's greatest motion picture, a Paramount Picture, to weld into one immense photoplay the drama and the romance of that century.

It is the longest picture ever made, the most absorbing and the most magnificent—a splendid example of the sort of picture which has put Paramount and Arcraft Motion Pictures where they are, foremost.

No emotion is left untouched by this colossus of dramas. Its scope is Homeric. It moves through Peace and through War, it moves amid the struggles of the body and the struggles of the soul, it has rosy laughter and pale tears.

Early frontier life is here, alternately dangerous and joyous, the slave trade upon the Mississippi and the slave auctions, the figures of great Americans are seen active amid the tumult of the Civil War, and through it all you feel a solemn and unique thrill that this really HAPPENED!

"The Son of Democracy" reveals the soul of a great nation finding itself, forging steadily ahead in the spirit of justice and fair play, even as that spirit today is expressing itself on the torn battlefields of Europe.

A bully show. A memorable one. It divides itself into ten logical chapters, one chapter given at each performance, and each chapter a complete drama in itself. See them all if you can. Thousands of theatres have already booked it.
