THE CHEERFUL CHERUB
Right now I'm living all alone. No sound the deathly silence breaks Except the ringing telephone — I'm glad when central makes mistakes.

Hoover Again
Mrs. Whiffletree—Sairey, what'd you do with the bit o' bacon Josh used to grease his boots with this mornin'?
Sairey—I fried the griddle cakes with it, marm.
Mrs. W. — Good fer you. I thought you had threw it away.—Michigan Gargoyle.

Who Said Hoover?
Jack—Now, Missy, what have you got?
Missy—Beef, mutton, pork, chicken, cold ham and tongue.
Jack—That'll do—and a cup of coffee.

King Solomon's wives find a strange blond hair on his dinner jacket.

Oh, Dear!
"John is trying to sell our car."
"But why?"
"He says the outgo for upkeep is more than his income."
That's So
"The cigarettes we buy nowadays are much more fragrant than they used to be."
"How's that?"
"Three cents more a package."
—Michigan Gargoyle.

SCHOOL DAYS

—Come now, take off your shief. You've got to have your neck washed and there's no use gawking about it. Do you suppose I'm goin' to send you to Sunday school tomorrow lookin' like a Love your coal bucket?
Blame it all I wish I was a dog or—a fish or—something.

The young lady across the way says the smoking habit is almost universal among American men now but she's glad to say there seems to be less chauvinism than there used to be.
