JUST GOSSIP ABOUT PEOPLE

Commander Payne to Address Red Cross Auxiliary Next Monday at 3:30 O'Clock-Base Hospital No. 20 Permanently Supplied by University Auxiliary

CERTAINLY was glad to hear at first a luncheon at the club in honor of Miss band from Mr. Will Irwin's talk just Alice Delamar and Miss Evangeline Johnhand from Mr. Will Irwin's talk just what it was that brought about the first success of the German drive on the Italians. I stopped in to hear him speak to the workers of the Independence Square Auxiliary of the American Red Cross on Monday, and believe me that German propaganda work had been so insidious and so well planned that one can scarcely be surprised that what happened did happen. And doesn't it make you wild when you think that perhaps that sort of thing is being tried on our men, too? The insidious whisperings of secret peace negotiations, "then why fight each other?" said the soldiers across No Man's Land to each other. "No. we'll say 'peace." But when the attack came the disaffected Austrians, who had been used to spread this talk, were moved away, all but the thin fringe at the front, and when the Italians said "Brother" the Germans answered "Brother," but ran them through the heart with bayonets as they answered.

There certainly were a great many there to hear Mr. Irwin. Mrs. Lorimer asked him to speak to the workers, and most of the women on the committee of the auxlliary came, too, and brought friends, so that the great room was very crowded.

Next Monday Commander Payne, of the Naval Home, will speak at the auxiliary at 3:30 o'clock, and Mrs. Charles V. Mc-Lean and Miss Eloise Dickey will entertain Mrs. Payne and the Commander and the ladies of the committee at tea at the Art Alliance afterwards.

DID you know that it had been abso-University Hospital Unit of the Red Cross that the members would take it on themselves to furnish all the supplies required by Base Hospital No. 20? Last year the University Auxiliary undertook the responsibility of furnishing beds, supplies and equipment for 500 persons, and already it has given the unit 125 large cases of surgical dressings, sheets, convalescent gowns, slippers, socks and other equipment incidental to hospital service. And it also collected more than $16,000 for the use of the base hospital. In the auxiliary there are 150 members, who have all signed up to continue the work during the war, and meetings are held every day from 10 until 4 o'clock in one of the hospital buildings.

The officers of this auxiliary include Mrs. William W. Arnett, president; Mrs. Edward T. Stotesbury, Mrs. John Frederick Lewis, Mrs. Samuel Houston and Mrs. George L. Harrison, vice presidents; Mrs. Caspar Wistar Hacker, secretary, with Mrs. Jack Hollingsworth as assistant; Mrs. George H. Frazier, treasurer; Mrs. John Clark, chairman of the surgical dressing committee, assisted by Mrs. John Deaver, Mrs. Bertram Lippincott and Mrs. Barton Hirst; Mrs. J. L. Ketterlinus, chairman of the purchasing committee, and Mrs. Tom Ashton, vice chairman, and Mrs. Mitchell Hastings, chairman of the wool committee, assisted by Mrs. Hirst, Mrs. J. W. Dixon, Helen Doughten, Marie Doughten, Katharine Hancock, Harriet Frazier, Edith Carpenter, Doris Dexter and Miss McDevitt.

Last June a box of gray wool was donated to the hospital to be knitted up for the Navy League, and Mrs. Arnett formed a committee of girls to teach the patients to knit. That box was used and several more since then, as it was found that it not only gave the patients something to do, but was a real mental diversion, which seemed beneficial for them.

Last October Mrs. Arnett and Mrs. Has tings decided that it would be best to work entirely for the Base Hospital No. 20, and a few days later the co-eds of the University held a mass-meeting in Houston Hall and volunteered their services and also offered to help raise the needful funds. They and the nurses and patients of the hospital put so much enthusiasm into the work that 600 woolen articles had been turned into the unit by the first of this month and more than $2000 had been raised. Mrs. Hastings has written to s number of graduates to ask aid in raising money to send woolen outfits to the hospital in France for the convalescents there, the need of warm clothing for these men being very great.

T OFTEN wonder why they think people don't know it. Why, my dear, he and she are to be seen almost at any time of afternoon or evening together, And they make a good looking pair, too. She has rather fair hair and a very good figure, and quite, oh, quite a delightful manner, while he is tall and dark and most atten tive. They must be engaged, you know, but they both separately and individually declare they are not; "just good friends," that's all. Well, the small bird told me otherwise; but then the bird often knows more than its prayers.

BEHIND THE SCENES With Rulers and Leaders of Wartime Europe By THE PRINCESS RADZIWILL

A Love Marriage

(Copyright, 1918.) AFTER numerous difficulties the marriage of the only brother of the Queen of the Relgians, Puke Ludwig Wilhelm of Ravaria, with the widowed Princers of Schenbourg-Waldenbourg has, it seems finally taken g Wilhelm of Ravaria, seems of Schenbourg-seems flually taken place. It beings to an end a romance which, in spite of the youth of its hero and heroine, has lasted many years.

The Princess Schenbourg is the eldest daughter of the late Prince Francis of Sayn Wittgenstein and of his wife, Mile. Julie Caxaleanti de Villeneuve, whose mother, the fameus Countess de Villeneuve, was conramous Countess de Villeneuve, was considered the most beautiful woman in Europe for something like forty years. She was a Brazilian, the wife of that rich Count of Villeneuve the owner of the biggest paneiro, who was for many years in the Brazilian diplomatic service and who occupied for a long time the post of Minister in Brussels. Madame de Villeneuve was certainly the loveliest creature any one's imagination could conceive. Wherever she went people raved about her, and serve actist of talent in the second half.

Villeneuve was certainly the solid conceive. Wherever she went people raved about her, and every artist of talent in the account half of the last century wanted to paint her portrait. She held a prominent position everywhere.

It is impossible to give an idea of the purity of her features, which she kept unimpaired until her death, at a relatively early age. She was hardly fifty when she passed away, and looked only five-and-twenty. There was not one wrinkle on her face, and ill-natured people used to say that she never laughed or even smiled, for fear of contracting the smoothness of her skin. The Countess was certainly one of the wonders of her sex and, one may almost say, of Europe, and no one who has had the advantage of contemplating her imposing personality can ever forget her. She entirely annihilated every other woman present when she entered a room, and she made the lovellest face appear old and faded beside hers.

woman present when she entered a room, and she made the lovellest face appear old and faded beside hers.

Madame de Villeneuve had two daughters, who, though handsome, had not inherited her particular and wonderful charm. The eldest married Count Goeriz, the head of one of the wealthiest and greatest of German families, and was the only creature who, if all that one hears is to be believed, inspired with a lasting affection Kaiser William II, who was seen to shed tears when she died about fifteen years ago, and who was so overcome by his emotion at her funeral that he had to be led out of the church during the service. It seems, also, that the Empress Augusta, who generally showed herself most philosophical in regard to her hubband's flirtations, could not restrain her jealousy in regard to the fair Countess, and was heard to express her satisfaction when death removed from her path this dangerous rival.

KID VESTS BEST FOR TRENCH WARFARE

Old Gloves Are Asked for as Donation by Committee of Overseas Club

At a meeting of the overseas committee of the Emergency Ald, which was held last week, a special appeal was made for the kid vest committee by Mrs. Louis Dannenbaum, who is the chairman. This committee is planning to enlarge the scope of its work so that one of these kid vests may become a part of every enlisted man's outfit. At present the price is somewhat above the average purse, but with larger quantities of old gloves and greater facilities for work the committee hopes to lower this considerably. The Glove Waistcoat Society of England, which has been in existence since the beginning of the war, has distributed more than thirty thousand of these vests. But kid is now being used in the munition factories over there, and the society has been unable to continue its splendid work. Kid vests last so much longer than the knitted variety in actual trench warfare, and afford such a wonderful protection from the wind and cold.

so much longer than the knitted variety in actual trench warfare, and afford such a wonderful protection from the wind and cold, that it is hoped we will be able to supply at least all of our own Pennsylvania men with this comfort.

Almost every one has a few pairs of old kid gloves, and if they are sent into the Emergency Aid overseas committee, at 1338 Walnut street, they will be used to a very good advantage. Any and all kinds of gloves are needed—men's or women's, long or short, black, white or colored—and the gloves may even be badly solled, as several firms in the city have kindly volunteered to clean all that come in for this work.

The committee in charge of this work includes Miss Ethel Lily, Miss Cecile Loucheim, Miss Mildred Singer, Miss Dorothy Lily, Miss Rebecca Simmons, Miss Eve Wallerstein, Miss Anne Walthour, Miss Rosalie Dannenbaum, Mrs. Bertram Lowry and Mrs. Louis Dannenbaum, chairman.

Marriage

in Munich, where she resides to the present day. She was a very hard mother for her own schildren, and shewed herself not only reglectful of them, but also harsh and unfeeling with her girls, whom she wished above everything to make beliain to marriages. In this ambition she succeeded, for the youngest was leady countries a succeeded, for the youngest was leady enough to attract the heir to the many millions of the old Prince Henckel von Dennersmarck, whose fortune is considered to be the largest in the whole of Germany after that of Hertha krupp. But the client, the Princens Eleonore, did not show herself so tractable in regard to her mother's wishes as her sister had been, and she refused, one after the other, all the occasions which were effered her to establish herself as well as her parents desired.

She was in love with the brother of two of her hest friends and companions, the future Queen of the Beigiams and the Crown Princess of Bavaria, Duke Fudwig Wilhelm. They had been brought un almost as brother and sister, the estate of Prince Wittgenstein being situated quite close to the villa where puke Charles Theodore of Bavaria was living, on the shores of the lake of Tegernsee, and they fell in love with each other when they were considered equal by birth to all the royal houses in Germany, and from that point of view a marriage between a daughter of that family, and the son and heir of a Havarian Prince would not have offered any difficulty. But both the young people were poor, and the Frincess Wittgemental would not heave of sche a thory she had invented about the Prince, in which he was represented as heing the lover.

noor, and the Princess Wittgenstein would not hear of such a thing.

One relates that she told her daughter a story she had invented about the Prince, in which he was represented as being the lover of a beautiful actress who was the fashion in Munich at the time. Eleonore was so hurt and disgusted that she consented in her anger to give her hand to the religing Prince of Schonbourg-Waldenbourg, who had for a long time entreated her to do so.

They were married in haste, and the bride had the time to repent at leisure, for she very soon discovered that the man to whom she found herself bound was a brutal character, who treated her with an utter want of consideration and who almost immediately after their marriage forsook her for other women of the lowest kind of character. The proud girl was reduced almost to-despair; the more so that she found out that she had been tricked into a union which had brought her tothing but sorrow and tears. At last she could bear it no longer, and she left the beautiful castle of Waldenbourg and returned to Munich, where she led a very retired and sad kind of existence, estranged even from her mother, whom she could not bring herself to forgive for the subterfuge which had wrecked her whole life.

Fate, however, showed liseif for once kind to this victim of maternal ambition. The war broke out and Prince Schonbourg, who had joined at once, was killed in one of the battles that took place near Rheims at the very beginning of the campaign. He left his widow a rich woman, and she could begin to look once more toward the future with joyful eyes. But then arose another difficulty. The Princess was known to have ardent French sympathies, and the King of Bavaria would not hear of a member of his family marrying a woman who did not approve of the ruthlessness of German methods. He put in his energetic veto to the marriage and for months poor Princess Eleonore and the Duke had to wait and wait for a happiness which seemed to be continually escaping them. It seems, however, that their weddin

Park Depew's hospital at the front in France (Red Cross Ambulance des Alles, Secteur Postal 205) have received acknowledgment from abroad in the form of letters from Ambassador William G. Sharp and from Mrs. Depew herself.

The ambassador's communication expresses the thanks of the embassy in Paris, while Mrs. Depew's note says that it is such contributions and the sending of boxes on the part of thoughtful American workers in behalf of France that makes her hospital possible.

Mrs. Depew says that her hospital has been enlarged and now has 300 beds, with the demands and needs of the institution al-demands and needs of the institution always increasing.

No little praise is accorded Mrs. Depaye by the ambassador in his communication, which is addressed to Mrs. Flenper, and Mrs. Depay's letter expresses deep grafitude for the work that these women, as well as American women generally, have done and are doing for her institution.
