Wonderful War Pictures Shown Last Night at the Bellevue-Stratford for the Benefit of the Unpensioned French Soldiers

WEREN'T the French war pictures tain Kelly is now stationed at a western camp in the Medical Officers' Reserve Corps. Stratford simply wonderful? But so dreadful, too. It does make one sick to think what our boys have to face and go through before victory is finally ours (as it surely will be). We have only to be brave and "carry on" to win in the

We hear of the vandalism, of the havon wrought by the retiring Germans, but we do not realize it until, as last night, we see a huge orchard in bloom, and every tree hacked in a circle three feet above ground (which means that the sap cannot ontinue to flow and the tree must die in a year's time). Or the interior of the chapel of the Cathedral of Rheims, where every French king spent the vigil of the day of his coronation, a mass of ruins, with only a bit of the reredos remaining Factories, manufacturing houses, homes, trees-all utterly ruined and devastated by dynamite, firebrands and shell shot. Really it was too utterly awful, and so real, being reproduced in the actual colors. It seemed as if one could searcely breathe with the horror of it, until the end, when there were thrown on the screen some reoductions of sunsets over the battlefields nd from the tower of Rheims Cathedral And it flooded one's soul with comfort and hought that "God is in His heaven," and the mere setting of His sun can bring he devastated regions, how much more an He bring out of all this sorrow in the ves of His poor people, if we but trust Him to bring it all right, and, in the antime, do our part, remembering the ging that "God made us without our operation, but He will not save us withat our co-operation."

TOLD you yesterday that Alden Lee did get a leave after all, but it was not til two weeks after his marriage. He d Edith were married at the Mathers ne on February 2, and Alden had to go ck to his ship that night. Of course ere were rumors that that meant he had sail right away, but it was not true. BEHIND THE SCENES . With Rulers and Leaders of Wartime Europe By THE PRINCESS RADZIWILL

The Duke of Chevreuse Killed in France

Copyright, 1918 A NOTHER representative of an old and historical French name has fallen on the field of bonor. The eldest son and the heir to the title of the Duke and Duchess of Luynes was killed the other day at the of Laynes was killed in age of twenty-six. This death puts into mourning a large circle of aristocratic families of the Fau-bourg St. Germain. The mother of the Tuke of Laynes was a daughter of the late fouce de ta Roche-foucald Doudeauville, and of his first wife. Mademoiselle de Po-lignac. His father, the ninth Duke of

was one of the most prominent women in Parisian society, as well as one of the most charming. She lived most of the year at her castle of Uampierre, where several times she entertained the late King Edward VII and the present Queen Mary of England, be-fore the latter's marriage. Her son is one of the great friends of the Duke of Orleans and one of the chiefs of the momarchical marty in Ffance. He is weided to Mademoiselle Simone d'Lzes, the daughter of the Duchess d'Uzes, of Boulanger fame. They had six children, four gaits, one bey very delicate in health and the young man who fell the other day and who bore the title of Dukes of the vereuse, made famous by the famous Duchess of that name, who was such a friend of Queen Anne of Austria and such an enemy of the Cardinal de Richelieu. Should anything happen to the last surviving son of the Duke of Luynes, the successor to its title and to all the family honors of his house would be the little Duke of Chalines, whose American mother, formerly Minn Schonts, is now in New York with him. The family of Luynes is of Italian origin. It first acquired notoriety through Charles d'Albert de Luynes, the favorite of King Luis XIII of France, who created him Duke and Peer of Parliament, and whose widow.

Marie de Rohan, married the second time Claude of Lorraine, Duke of Cheveruse, by whom, however, she had no children. But after the death of the latter she bought from his helfs the Duchy of Chevreuse, togther with the Castle of Damplere, which she be-queathed to her son by her first husband, and thus brought this title into the Luynes family. Many years later they also acquired that of Prince of Neuchatel and of Valengin by the marriage of Duke Charles Philippe of Luynes, with Louise Jacqueline, of Bourbon Soissons,

THE DUCHESS DE CHEVREUSE

THE DUCHESS DE CHEVREUSE Dampierre, which is one of the most beau-tiful residences in the department of Seine e. Oise, has remained in possession of the Lugness family ever since the death of the Duchess de Chevreuse. During the French Revolution its owner and his wife, that Duch-cass de Lugnes who was one of the Indies-in-waiting on Queen Marie Antoinette, contrived to establish for themselves the reputation of being good citizens, and they were left in undisturbed possession of their family castle, in which they lived very quietly until the storm of the "Terror" had passed away. the storm of the "Terror" had passed away Then they returned to Paris, where the Duch-ess de Luynes was one of the first ladies who again opened their houses to what was left of the old French society.

again opened their houses to what was left of the old French society. Napoleon restored to her and to her hus-band a large part of their former properties, wishing to concillate through this plece of generosity the Faubourg St. Germain, whose support at that time he would have been very glad to win. But though the Layneses would rather have felt inclined to accept the advances which he made to them through the Duchess's great friend. Prince de Talley-rand, they were prevented from too openly espousing his cause by their daughter-in-iaw, the Duchess de Cherreuse. She remained un-til her death an irreconcilable enemy of the new Emperor, and this in spite of the lat-ter's efforts to win her sympathies, efforts which he carried to an amazing extent, con-sidering the imperiousness of his disposition. Madame de Chevreuse was appointed one of the ladies of honor to the Empress Jose-phine, much to her disguid, but when she was asked to attend the Queen of Spain, wife of Ferdinand VII, when the Spanish sov-ereigna were living at Valencay in what was more or less a prison, however golden, the Duchess de Chevreuse rended that she would tiful fair hair, which had always been so ad-mired, was nothing else but a wig, her own being of a flery red, a fact which she had very cleverly contrived to hide from every-body. After her death her hurband, who in due time succeeded to the family honors, married again, and it is from him that the present Duke of Luynes is descended.

DAMPIERRE

Dampierre, which had remained untouche Dampierre, which had remained untouched for two centuries, was extensively restored in the latter half of the last, and is now one of the wonders of France. Among other spartmonts it contains a small closet, for it can hardly be called a room, all hung up with violet velvet, in the middle of which stands a silver statue, the work of the great artist, Rude, representing King Louis XIII, the real founder of the glories of the house of Luynes. This was put there by the grand-father of the present Duke, who trealist the casile. It was he also who drained the mont which surreands this lovely residence, and who added much to the natural beauties of the park.

and who scided much to the natural beauties of the park. The last time that Dampierre was the scene of a great feativity was on the oc-casion of the marriage of the sister of the present Duke to the then Duke of Avon now the Duke of Noailles, which was cele-brated there on the 6th of December, 1892. The Dowager Duchess de Lurnes was still alive at the time, and she invited all her relatives and friends so that nearly the whole of the Faubourg St. Germain graced the old residence so many kings and queens had visited in former times. The occasion was also made memorable by the first ap-pearance in French society of the late Duch-ces de la Rochefonauld, one of the first Americans to wed into French aristooratic circles. She was Miss Mitchell, of Port-land, whose beauty made such a semation that all the Paris newspapers raved about that all the Paris newspapers raved about it for weeks to come.

But all this is a thing of the past, Dam-piere is now in mourning. like the whole of France, and indeed, like the whole of the world today.

Mrs. Reggie Vanderbilt, Jr., is over rom New York, and is staying at the raymore. Mrs. William Disston is also tere and Pauline. Pauline is another pretty little bride of the wartime. Her sband.' young John Wanamaker, Jr., is the service, you know, so they do not much of each other. The weather has been quite gorgeous for an early Lent, and as there is so very little to do these days, many, oh, very many, are down there.

THERE was a picture of the Kaiser, the L Kaiserine and one of the Kaiserinos in one of the Sunday papers last week, and mother, who had not had a chance to see the colored section, found it on the floor. and, what was more, soaking wet. She called little John J., and said: "Dearie, what is this? Mother has not even seen the paper yet, and here are some of the pletures all wet!"

Little John J. gazed sadly at his mother. Words failed him. Then he exclaimed: "Bu-u-t, mother! That's a picture of the Kalther, and we have been thpitting at him. We filled our mouths with water and then thpit juth ath hard ath we could." You see how the doctrine of hate spreads; does it not?
